Far-Away Leaves Us Calm
The Vatican and Japan
Some Plain Language

Fatal floods in Brazil follow equatorial rains, lasting five days; many killed, buildings washed away. More earthquake damage in Turkey. Two thousand killed there.

These places are far away. We read the words: "Flood," or "earthquake," read figures and pass on. We do not see, or faintly imagine the suffering, horrible fear, twisted bodies.

Vatican City announces arrangements for diplomatic relations between the Papal State and Japan. When arrangements are complete a Japanese ambassador will be sent to the Holy See, and a Papal Nuncio to Tokio, to replace the apostolic delegate.

Intelligent Japan well knows that the influence of the Pope is by no means represented by the small territory actually under Papal rule. What Japan has in mind is the good will of the high intelligence concentrated in the college of cardinals, and the great influence of the Pope, throughout the world.

Harry L. Hopkins, federal emergency relief administrator, uses language as plain as that of Mussolini or Stalin. He finds that we have in America a class of "oppressors," rich men, and promises that small oppressive business minority "who extol poverty and profits in the same breath" shall be made outcasts in the "new order" that is coming.

Some airplane news. Russia admits owning 3000 fighting planes, besides 900 always kept, with a big submarine fleet, within 400 miles of the coast of Japan, "purely in the interest of peace." Russia says officially: "An enemy can be certain that if he attacks the war will be waged on his own territory." Any enemy attacking this country, unfortunately, would find our cities wide open inviting aerial bombing operations. But the President intends to change that.

France, investigating a German Lufthansa passenger plane at Le Bourget, is horrified to find "a regular bomb launching apparatus" in the plane's baggage compartment. Such a condition would exist as a matter of course, since Germans are intelligent.

Italy, according to a sound correspondent, expects to be busy fighting Abyssinia, and the "direct descendant of King Solomon and the Queen of Sheba" this fall. Mussolini anticipating no serious trouble with Germany. That nation, he believed, is "bluffing" Europe, and will get what she really wants fighting for it.

When you read this, Robert Allen Edwards will have taken his seat in the electric chair at Rockview, Pa. Reporters give a pathetic description of his mental agony, and of the agony of his father, mother and brother, with whom all must sympathize.

It is sad for a young man of 22 to take his place in what criminals call "the hot seat." BUT young Mr. Edwards, because he wanted to marry a younger and prettier girl, killed Freda McKechnie, whom he had promised to marry.

He threw her into a lake struck her on the head as she begged for help, drowned her. And killing her he killed her unborn child.

U.S. Supreme Court Against Rail Pensions

SEN. CUTTING, 3 OTHERS DEAD IN PLANE CRASH

RAIL PENSION VOID, HOLDS HIGH COURT

By Associated Press

Washington, May 6—In another of its famous five-to-four decisions, the Supreme Court today declared unconstitutional the railway retirement law affecting more than a million employes.

"The act was beyond the powers of Congress," said Justice Roberts, who delivered the high court's opinion.

He assailed sections of the law pensioning employes who have voluntarily left the carriers' service; those who have been discharged for dishonesty and for gross negligence and those who have been automatically retired.

HUGHES LEADS MINORITY

Chief Justice Hughes, who delivered the opinion upholding the government in the famous gold clause cases, was in the minority this time. He wrote the dissenting opinion and was joined by Justices Brandeis, Stone and Cardozo.

Aligned with Justice Roberts were Justices Van Devanter, McReynolds, Sutherland and Butler.

Justice Roberts' words that the act was "invalid as violative of the process" of law and was "not in purpose or in effect a regulation of commerce" were immediately interpreted by some observers as laying down principles which may affect materially the court's judgment of NRA and its code rule of industry.

President Roosevelt in signing the railway law last spring had commented it was "crudely drawn."

CITES HUGE COST

Just Roberts said the act would benefit 146,000 persons who had retired within one year before its enactment.

"This is in the last degree arbitrary," he said.

Ruling that invalid sections of the law made the entire act unconstitutional, Justice Roberts said those who were scheduled to retire when the act was to become effective would have received a pension although they never had contributed.

He added the cost the first year would be $50,000,000.

"That is not a permissible subject of legislation," he said, explaining it set up "new contract obligations."

Some railroads, he said, would have had to pay money for the employes of other carriers.

Copyrighted, 1935, by Associated Press

London, May 6—While millions of loyal subjects throughout the British empire celebrated his silver jubilee in mingled carnival and solemnity, King George V knelt in prayers of thanksgiving today for completion of 25 years on the throne.

Both the King and Queen Mary were plainly thrilled by the nation's fervent outpouring of love and devotion as they entered St. Paul's Cathedral to worship amid scenes of medieval pageantry.

Outside the ancient edifice, cheering thousands, many of whom had stood all night for the opportunity to pay tribute to their sovereign, jammed the route of the royal procession from Buckingham Palace to St. Paul's.

A single untoward incident marred the triumphal march. Midway a Communist banner was unfurled at Ludgate Circus at the moment when King George was being driven past the spot.

The temper of the crowd became threatening as the banner was let loose. Spectators looked up to find

DILL SWINDLE CHARGED BY NORTON

City Councillor Clement A Norton demanded today that all the facts in connection with the collapse of Dill and Company, stock firm, be turned over to the public.

In a prepared statement that attacked the securities division of the Public Utilities Department and intimated that a high police official was involved, Norton charged that the public was fleeced of more than $600,000 by the company.

He called upon Mayor Mansfield to ask Attorney General Paul A. Dever and Police Commissioner Eugene McSweeney to present all the facts to the public.

Norton's action comes on the heels of an order filed in the Legislature by Representative Roland Sawyer demanding a state investigation into the securities department.

Sawyer, in a fresh blast today, said:

"It is singular that within 24 hours after I filed that order for an investigation a letter from Arthur E. Gibbs, missing broker,

TOBY WING'S GRIEF

Father Injured in Plane Crash Shortly After Jackie Coogan Accident

By International News Service

Hollywood, May 6—Tragedy struck doubly in the life of Toby Wing, beautiful young screen actress, in the past 48 hours.

Jackie Coogan, young screen star, to whom Miss Wing has frequently been reported engaged, narrowly escaped death in an automobile accident Saturday night which cost the life of his father and three others.

But for the fact film engagements prevented, Miss Wing might have been a victim herself of the Coogan automobile crash.

She had been invited on the ranch party but was forced to decline because of studio work.

In Hollywood Captain Wing had served as a director.

He was business manager of the Paramount unit making Annapolis Farewell," and it was to make preparations for the "shooting" of this picture that he was en route East by plane with other Paramount executives.

In addition to Toby, another screen actress daughter, Pat, and Mrs. Wing were prostrated by news of the accident. Paul, Jr., had not been told of the accident.

WOMAN ONE OF VICTIMS; BABY ON BOARD

By Associated Press

Atlanta, Mo., May 6—Senator Bronson M. Cutting of New Mexico and three others were carried to their deaths in a fog-bound TWA transport plane near here this morning.

Nine persons, six of them members of a motion-picture production unit eastbound to make a film at Annapolis, were injured and taken to a Macon, Mo., hospital, 15 miles from the scene of the crash.

The list of dead:
Senator Cutting.
Pilot Harvey Bolton of Kansas City.
Co-pilot Kenneth Greeson of Kansas City.

The injured:
Mr. and Mrs. William Kaplan, Hollywood. Kaplan is an assistant producer of a film company.
C. B. Drew, Hollywood.
Henry Sharpe, Hollywood.
Mrs. Dora Metzger and baby, bound from Los Angeles to Newark.
Mrs. D. I. Meaker of Kansas City, wife of a TWA pilot.

Senator Cutting was hurrying to Washington from New Mexico to vote today on the bonus bill. News of the prominent Progressive Republican's death caused a shock in his home state and in the national capital.

All in the hospital were reported seriously injured except Kaplan.

The accident occurred about six miles west of here in rugged country where emergency landing conditions had been rendered hazardous by recent rains.

Eastbound non-stop from Albuquerque to Kansas City, the ship arrived over the Kansas City airport at 3:36 a. m. 20 minutes late, at an altitude of 400 feet.

Dispatcher Kors advised Pilot Bolton there was only 200 feet of ceiling there, due to the low hanging fog and smoke, and ordered the ship on to the Department of Commerce emergency landing field at Kirksville or Knoxville, Mo.

About 120 miles northeast of Kansas City, just 15 miles short of the field at Kirksville, fuel gave out and an immediate landing was necessary.

This much was reconstructed from final radio reports and reports of Charles Bledsoe, farmer, who lives near the scene of the crash, who said the motors of the ship [illegible] sputtered out.

Bledsoe said the crash occurred about 3:30 a. m. on a rolling pasture a fourth-mile from his farm home, which is six miles west of Atlanta.

ACE WITNESS FACES GRAND JURY ON CRIME TRUST

FROM DESCRIPTIONS BY WITNESSES OF THE MAIL HOLDUP, SERGEANT (now CAPTAIN) CHARLES BUCHANAN OF PROVIDENCE, EXPERT ON IDENTIFICATION, WAS CONVINCED THAT ANDINO MEROLA WAS ONE OF THE PAYROLL BANDITS...

MEROLA WAS 'PICKED UP' AND QUESTIONED. HE DENIED ANY COMPLICITY IN THE ROBBERY. HE REVEALED, HOWEVER, THAT 'DU BOIS', UNDER WHICH NAME THE SEDAN WAS REGISTERED, WAS HERBERT HORENSTEIN.

PLAIN CLOTHES MEN TOOK UP THE TRAIL OF HORENSTEIN. HE HAD OCCUPIED A ROOM IN A PAWTUCKET LODGING HOUSE FOR ONLY ONE DAY AND WAS IDENTIFIED FROM PICTURES...

DETECTIVES KEPT HORENSTEIN IN SIGHT AND WHEN HE BOARDED A TRAIN FOR THE WEST THE SLEUTHS WENT ALONG... ACROSS THE CONTINENT TO CALIFORNIA

IN LOS ANGELES HORENSTEIN SPENT A TWENTY DOLLAR BILL WHICH WAS IMMEDIATELY CHECKED AND FOUND TO BE PART OF THE LOOT FROM THE FALL RIVER MAIL ROBBERY.

HORENSTEIN WAS TAKEN INTO CUSTODY. HE IS STILL BEING HELD IN "PLACE UNKNOWN" AS A MATERIAL WITNESS AND ROBBERY SUSPECT...

MEANWHILE MEROLA, OF WHOM SERGT. BUCHANAN WAS STILL SUSPICIOUS, WAS BEING SHADOWED. SLEUTHS WATCHED HIM DAY AND NIGHT...

'After months of plugging police uncovered the clues that led to the "hot trail" of the "crime trust." Nothing but dull solid routine, behind-the-lines police work which the public never sees and rarely understands—a holdup: then descriptions, rarely accurate due to the excitement of witnesses. Known figures of the underworld are brought in, questioned. To go free, the suspect often will pin "the rap" on another, who has fled and is in hiding.—Andino Merola did it once too often, police admit. Detectives took up the trail following Merola's tip-off and traced another to the coast. It was former Brown University student Herbert H. Hornstein. Once more hours of questioning, as detectives sought the weak link in the gang chain. Charles Schmidt, Boston Evening American staff artist, illustrates a chapter in the tragedy drama of the gunmen against the law.

staring them in the face the words: "Workers of all lands, unite!"

The banner was to have read: "Long may they reign!"

During the night the Communist slogan had been substituted. The reverse side read:

"The glorious reign—unemployment, hunger and war."

Young men and women immediately rushed to the spot, tore the banner to bits and trampled it under foot, while police raided the building from which it was displayed.

TEARS OF JOY

A section of the banner was rescued from the mob and stored away for safe keeping until tonight, when it will be placed on top of a huge bonfire in Hyde Park to be ignited when the King presses an electric switch in Buckingham Palace.

The King, saluting and smiling, shared with the Queen the crowd's attention as they drove through the streets, enacted the ancient ceremony of gaining admittance to the city of London and entered St. Paul's to kneel humbly at the feet of ecclesiastics who lifted their voices in thanksgiving.

STORM HITLER FLAG

A jubilee crowd in the West End became unruly when it sighted a swastika flag flying above the Union Jack on a house, and police were called to restore order.

The flag was removed.

Only in the Irish Free State—which George himself made free—was public rejoicing lacking. President Eamon De Valera had decided no official observance of the occasion should take place.

One lone Union Jack, guarded by police, flew at Dublin.

Many of those in the crowds thought they detected tears of happiness in Queen Mary's eyes as she rode beside her husband between the almost unbroken lines of cheering subjects.

Leaving the Cathedral, their majesties took another route back to Buckingham Palace, by way of the historic Thames, and again bowed and smiled in answer to the deafening ovations that everywhere greeted them.

Loyal and devoted subjects filled London to overflowing.

Weary-eyed thousands, who had spent the night along the projected route of the silver jubilee procession were joined at dawn by additional throngs pouring from buses, trams and underground.

The 69-year-old sovereign and his consort arose at their usual hour, 7:30. They found the day warm, with the city bathed in mellow sunshine.

28,000 GUARD ROUTE

By 8 a. m. the main thoroughfares and side streets along the route of the royal procession were packed from shopfront to curb. A carnival spirit pervaded the multitude, intermingled with a deeper, more solemn note of reverential loyalty.

Fourteen thousand soldiers, sailors and members of the royal air force and 12,000 police struggled to keep the crowd within bounds. Scotland Yard put 9000 uniformed men on the streets in addition to nearly 1000 plainclothesmen.

London's regular force of 1100 police was augmented by 500 picked officers from the provinces and 500 special constables.

It was drawn by horses, which at other times pull a brewer's van.

THOUSANDS STRICKEN

So tremendously exhuberant was the celebration that 37 persons were taken to hospitals with injuries suffered in the crush and the ambulance corps reckoned it had treated 7139 cases of fainting, sprained ankles and broken bones at 1.30 p. m.

Fifty doctors, 1000 nurses and 3000 orderlies manned 70 ambulance stations and 24 ambulances. The corps went on one full week's duty for the huge crowds expected tonight's bonfires and the remainder of the week's ceremonies.

At Newcastle more than 60 persons were injured, 14 of them seriously, when a spectators' stand collapsed.

Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald, accompanied by his daughter Ishbel, left Clarence Gate for St. Paul's shortly after 10 a. m. He was followed by the prime ministers of Canada, South Africa, Australia and New Zealand and other empire representatives.

WALES' BEST WISHES

The entrance to St. Paul's was brilliant with multi-hued uniforms, as diplomats and distinguished guests entered.

Following Captain Fitzroy, Viscount Sankey, Lord Chancellor of the House of Lords, rode between the cheering ranks of spectators in a closed carriage drawn by four horses with two outriders.

Church bells set up a continual din at Buckingham Palace. The appearance of little Princesses Elizabeth and Margaret Rose, smiling and bubbling over with excitement, drew renewed choruses of cheers.

The Prince of Wales arrived in an automobile which entered the palace grounds by a side gate. With other members of the royal family, he went at once to their majesties' apartments to extend his congratulations.

King George's dazzling calvacade swung out of the sanded courtyard of Buckingham Palace punctually at 10.34 a. m.

GRAND CHILDREN THERE

Just previously the Duke of York's carriage left the Palace grounds bearing King George's second son, clad in a colorful naval uniform. He was accompanied by the Duchess and the little Princesses Elizabeth and Margaret Rose.

The Duke and Duchess of Kent followed. Then came the Prince of Wales in the uniform of a colonel of the Welsh Guards, riding with Queen Maud of Norway. Next were the Duke of Gloucester, the Princess Royal, her husband, the Earl of Harewood, and their two sons, George's only grandsons.

The procession made its first halt at the site of old Temple Bar, dividing line between the city of Westminster and London proper, then proceeded to the Cathedral of St. Paul.

ROSS IS BARRED FROM ELECTION

Two petitions that would have enabled Ross to run as a candidate to succeed himself were turned down today by the full bench of the supreme court.

In both cases the bench acted against the ousted official.

Ross was ousted March 20 after he had been found guilty of violating the corrupt practices law governing campaign expenditures.

LEGION CARRIES CHURCH FIGHT TO CONVENTION

Resolutions condemning the New England Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church for its attack on the American Legion may be adopted by the state department of the Legion on May 17, it was revealed today.

Harold J. Redden, state adjutant of the Legion, said the resolutions will be presented to the executive council of the Legion on that day for action.

Incensed at the attack, in which the Legion was charged with "fostering Fascism," the Middlesex County council of the Legion already has adopted resolutions demanding that the church conference retract its "unjust and unfair action."

At the Legion meeting, the Rev. Royal K. Hayes, past national chapiain, made a vigorous attack on some of the Methodist clergy and charged that parlor-pinks in pulpits and radical professors in colleges are largely responsible for spread of Communistic trends.

"Many Methodist ministers and professors," he said, "are notorious for their anti-American utterances."

has been found by the Securities department.

"The letter was mailed from Chicago and might have been a valuable clue in locating Gibbs."

Denouncing Dill & Co., Norton said:

"This outfit has been doing business in Boston since 1923 and many people in my section (Hyde Park) lost their life savings.

"One old couple with $5000 left in the world gave it to this company. Today the stock is not worth five cents.

"In 1927, the state of Ohio asked the state of Massachusetts, 'is there not something we can do to stop this outfit from sending fraudulent stock from Massachusetts to innocent buyers in Ohio?'"

"In 1934 the state of Connecticut banned this company from doing business in that state. Not until March 1, 1935, was this outfit stopped from doing business in Massachusetts by the Department of Public Utilities. Why?

"The Commonwealth pays money to protect innocent people from such swindlers. The Securities Division of the Department of Public Utilities is charged with this duty. Why was this state, the 'home port,' the protector for so many years since the start in 1923?

"The files of the Boston Better Business Bureau have been full of complaints against this concern for years. Complaints of poor, helpless people who lost their life savings.

"Why did the police department allow one Harold McCormack (missing president of the company) who no one seems to know anything about, to conduct his operations for years in Boston?

"Carrying an account with this outfit is the name of an individual who has the same name as the police official directly charged with protecting the public from fraudulent stocks connected with the Boston police department.

DEMANDS FULL BROBE

"Did the officer in charge of rooting out fraudulent stock from Boston carry an account with this Dill outfit? If this police official is involved, and did have an account with Dill & Company, it shows one of two things:

"One—either that he was so dumb as not to know Dill & Company or, that he knew about conditions and instead of protecting the public decided to 'jump in and milk the public.'

"I am sure that Police Commissioner McSweeney and Attorney General Dever are upright, honorable officials who will go to the bottom of this whole mess."

ROBLES JURY Will Meet Again

Tucson, Ariz., May 6—The federal grand jury investigating the kidnaping of little Juna Robles more than a year ago, was in recess today after returning an indictment against Oscar Robson, charged with mailing threatening letters with intent to extort, but had the permission of Judge Sames to meet again on the abduction case whenever it becomes necessary to do so.

Robson will be taken before the United States commissioner today.

It could not be learned if bond had been raised for him. He is already at liberty on $5000 bond.

Bell, rushing into the room, saw two men kicking in the panes of the French windows. Seven panes of glass had already been shattered. The men fled, leaving broken glass, bloodstains on one sill and a completely puzzled attorney.

SEN. CUTTING'S DEATH SHOCKS CAPITAL

By International News Service

Washington, May 6—The sudden, tragic death of Senator Bronson S. Cutting (R.), New Mexico, in an airplane crash in Missouri, came as a shock today to his colleagues and to Washington officialdom, from President Roosevelt down.

The former New Yorker who went West and carved out his own political career was genuinely popular in the Senate for his independent views and scholarly ability.

The Senate met as usual at noon and then adjourned out of respect.

At that hour, his aged mother, Mrs. Bayard Cutting, with whom he lived, had not been notified of the tragedy.

This task fell to the lot of the senator's secretary, Edgar Puryear, who asked Senator Robert M. LaFollette of Wisconsin to accompany him. LaFoliette and Cutting were close personal friends.

Cutting's colleagues were quick to give expressions to their fondness for and appreciation of his qualities.

"He was a fine patriotic citizen and rendered a great service to his country," said Vice-President Garner.

R. I. GANG LINK TO BROOKLYN THEFT PROBED

Attempts to link Carlo Rettich and his "crime syndicate" with the $427,000 Brooklyn (N. Y.) bank truck robbery and a huge New York jewelry robbery were revealed today as Herbert Hornstein, key witness in the $129,000 Fall River mail truck theft, was smuggled before the federal grand jury.

A former Brown University student, Hornstein was dapperly clad and held his handkerchief over his face as he was hurried into the grand jury room in the Federal Building.

TWO MORE WITNESSES

It was understood also that Saul and Milton Kaufman, alleged associates of Rettich, would appear before the grand jury.

Afterward the grand jury members were to view, at the Federal building, the false-bottomed truck used by the Fall River bandits in making away with the mail bags containing the $129,000.

Attempts to link the Rettich gang with the Brooklyn street robbery and the New York jewelry holdup came out of discoveries made when the so-called "Crime Castle" of the ring in Warwick, R. I., was raided.

It was revealed that in this raid, a $1000 bill was included in the loot recovered. There was no $1000 bill in the Fall River money stolen, but there were $1000 bills in the Brooklyn, N. Y., bank truck loot.

$2500 BRACELET TRACED

Also recovered was a $2500 diamond bracelet, which Rettich declared belonged to his wife.

Today, however, a New York jewelry salesman, whose name Providence detectives declined to reveal, identified the bracelet as part of the loot stolen from him in a New York holdup a year ago.

A further link, into New York case when police received information that the mail bags taken in the Fall River holdup are in the hands of a New York racketeer, who has been attempting to use them in blackmailing the Fall River bandits.

According to Detective Captain Francis J. Buchanan of Providence, the authorities were given information as to location of the mail bags.

Prior to the grand jury proceedings today, conferences were held at the Federal building to line up the government case.

78 ILL IN HARVARD

Virus Infection, Not Food, Blamed for Epidemic Which Strickens 11 More

Bringing the total to 78, 11 more Harvard students were stricken with the mysterious illness over the week-end, it was reported today.

State Board of Health officials became alarmed over the increasing number and planned to dispatch a health inspector to the college to remain on the campus for a few days.

The health official will investigate every possible outlet of the disease in a check of all sources of infection.

Dr. Paul H. Means, head of Harvard's hygiene department, after a conference with state health officials, announced the malady was not due to any food served in the college dining halls but to a virus infection that has broken out sporadically all over the Commonwealth during the last two months.

With the presence of the health official on the campus, it is hoped by officials that a further outbreak of the bewildering disease will be prevented.

It is believed that many others have suffered from the illness, although not officially reported. Harvard urged its students today to report all illness at once.

Plot on Gloria

Mother Sought Death, Charge

New York, May 6—Mrs. Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt once was accused by her own mother of plotting little Gloria Vanderbilt's death, testimony at the secret hearing over the child's custody reveals.

The motive for doing away with the child, Supreme Court Justice John F. Carew was told, was her $4,000,000 fortune.

The child's mother and Prince Gottfried zu Hohenlohe, once engaged to Mrs. Vanderbilt, were accused of wanting to inherit the money left by the child's father, according to the testimony.

It was Prince Hohenlohe himself who told the story of the murder charge. It was made to him by Mrs. Laura K. Morgan, Mrs. Vanderbilt's mother, he said. He scoffed at her suspicions, Justice Carew was told by the witness.

Against this fantastic background of charges of plotted murder, bitter family quarrels, social intrigue and religious hatred, Mrs. Vanderbilt's fight for the custody of little Gloria was spotlighted today.

Incredible Charges

The secret testimony in the custody hearing, being published for the first time, reveals an almost incredible story of charges and counter charges.

Through it all, little Gloria stood as a pitiful pawn in the battle of international society.

Highlights of other testimony were:

Charges that Maria Caillot, French maid who accused Mrs. Vanderbilt of undue intimacy with Lady Milford-Haven, was unable to prove her claims, and that she herself was the victim of a sudden violent illness caused by her own indiscretions in the presence of little Gloria and her nurse, Emma Keislich.

It was said that Prince zu Hohenlohe's mother got down on her knees begging Mrs. Gloria Vanderbilt to wed Gottfried.

Gloria's guardians, George W. Wickersham and Thomas B. Gilchrist, were urged by Mrs. Morgan to cut down Mrs. Vanderbilt's allowance so as to discourage the romance with the German prince, it was testified.

Mrs. Morgan, witnesses said, hated the prince because he was planning to bring up little Gloria after the German fashion, on the principle that "the curb of the bridle should be strong." He also wanted to change the child's name if he married her mother.

Made Sacrifices

Although Mrs. Vanderbilt was bitterly attacked by her mother and in depositions left by her father, other witnesses said she had made great sacrifices to pay debts her father feared would disgrace him in South America.

It was reported that Mrs. Morgan suggested that her daughter sell Mrs. Morgan's pearl necklace to Reggie Vanderbilt shortly before the marriage, to help psy Morgan's debt.

Although Gloria resented this attempt to milk her husband-to-be she pawned her jewels after her husband's death to pay off her father's $12,000 bill.

Mrs. Morgan divorced her husband when he was over 70, she testified, so that she would not "be living in sin." She said he was too friendly with three women in London.

It was socially prominent Beth Leary who first introduced Mrs. Vanderbilt to A. C. Blumenthal.

Mrs. Morgan, who espoused the cause of Mrs. Whitney, in her action to obtain the child, confessed her dislike of the Prince. Her distaste, she said, came to a sharp focus after she saw the Prince in her daughter's bed.

He was the latter's house guest at Biarritz. Awakened by loud talking in Gloria's room, separated from her own by a bath, Mrs. Morgan said she went to the door of her daughter's chamber. It was six inches ajar.

Within the room were Gloria and the Prince. Mrs. Morgan paused at the portal for five minutes or so, having called little Gloria's nurse to join in her observation of the love scene.

STRANGE Revival OF DEAD

ANIMALS LIVE; TEST HAILED

By Universal Service

Los Angeles, Cal., May 6—Science overcame the enemy death in a Hollywood laboratory in a startling experiment as strange as it was successful.

Surrounded by tensely expectant assistants, Dr. Ralph Willard, youthful research chemist, revived to complete normalcy a small animal which he had frozen to death three days previously.

Exultantly Dr. Willard announced the success of his amazing experiment and revealed that during the past week he had restored life to three other guinea pigs after the animals, solidly frozen, had been kept "on ice" for from eight hours to as long as four days.

During this period Dr. Willard conducted careful tests until the experiments of the past week convinced him he has discovered a new process of revivification which he believes will prove revolutionary in the treatment of some of mankind's most baffling diseases.

Describing the method by which he restored the frozen guinea pig to squealing, scampering activity, Dr Willard said:

"In the beginning of the experiment, I injected sodium citrate into the animal for two hours to destroy in its system the substance of fibrogen which, when death occurs, causes the blood to coagulate. If the blood coagulates it is impossible to start the heart action later.

"When ready to revive the frozen animal, I placed it back in the chamber and applied heat slowly for several hours until body temperature was normal. Then a blood transfusion brought the first faint heart action, oxygen meanwhile having been turned into the chamber. Injections of adrenalin-ephedrine at regular intervals quicken the heart beat.

"Gradually movements of the guinea pig became normal until it was walking about, even nibbling at a stalk of spinach!"

Love Has No Price, Says Rep. Katherine Foley

The rules committee of the House of Representatives was asked today to help "take heart balm off the gold standard."

Representative Katherine A. Foley of Lawrence made the plea when she appeared for her bill which would abolish the causes now given under the law for breach of promise suits. She said:

"A large majority of the breach of promise suits degenerate into extortion. Most of them are nothing but legal blackmail. There is no place in the modern world for laws which place a price on a person's affections."

Favoring the bill were Representatives Mollie Sweetser of Reading, Katherine Parker of Lancaster, Emma Brigham of Springfield and Mary L. Barrows of Melrose.

Frederic Jenks, Boston attorney, was the only one to object. He charged the bill is "too loosely drawn."

TEXTILE Relief DEMAND

CURLEY HEADS PROTEST GROUP

By International News Service

Washington, May 6—Demanding a substitute for the cotton processing tax, Massachusetts manufacturers, members of Congress and Governor Curley appeared before President Roosevelt's cabinet textile committee today.

Making it clear that New England manufacturers have no desire to curtail farmers' relief, F. W. Steele, New Bedford manufacturer, said:

"We come before you asking that some other method be used to take care of this relief and let our industry be released of one of the burdens under which we are now struggling.

"The processing tax is one of the factors which is contributing largely to the serious position in which the cotton textile industry finds itself.

POINTS TO CLOSED MILLS

"This burden has seriously affected the sales of our merchandise to the extent that unsold merchandise has piled up with the consequence of freezing of operating capital.

"We find ourselves in the position where extensive curtailment and in many cases complete shutdown of our plants has taken place.

"While the tax affords relief for the moment to the farmer, it has now reached the point where it is removing many of his customers from his market, thereby reducing the opportunity for the disposal of his product.

"During the past eight months 21 American cotton mills have been forced to close with a loss of employment to 21,000 workers."

GUNS TURNED ON TAX

As most of last week's witnesses dealt at length on the ill effects of Japanese imports, today's speakers confined themselves to the processing tax and the wage differential of the cotton textile code.

Coolidge said:

"It is agreed that the cotton textile code has eliminated much of the differential, and therefore the Northern mills should be grateful and not show the bad taste to object to the present wage inequality.

"However, if you have a cut artery and are bleeding to death, and if someone only partly sewed up the severed vein so that you are bleeding to death more slowly, this fact is still a poor reason why you should not call for further assistance.

Fall River used to be a print cloth center. Last week the Federal Trade Commission had difficulty in finding print cloth mills not only in Fall River but in the entire North."

EDWARDS GAME AS HE DIES FOR SLAYING OF GIRL

With poker-face and iron nerve, Robert Allen Edwards, 22, "the kid" to his cell mates, paid with his life for the slaying of Freda McKechnie, the girl who stood in the way of his perfect love.

While the chaplain was still speaking, he went to his death. Two thousand volts coursed through his body for three and one-half minutes.

He was pronounced dead by Dr. J. G. Weixel, prison surgeon.

DIED BRAVE

The Reverend Thomas Hughes, home-town minister whom the youth asked to see him during his last hours on earth, said:

"Bobby went to his death brave. He knew that God forgives those who ask forgiveness.

"And before he died, Bobby asked God to forgive him for his sins."

The young Edwardsville former coal miner read a Bible in his last hours, a Bible it was explained, which was given him by Margaret Crain, Aurora, N. Y., school teacher, shortly after his arrest.

It was a desire to marry Miss Crain, whom he met in Mansfield State Teachers' College, the state charged, which led Bobby to club Freda McKechnie to death during a swimming party at Harvey's Lake near Wilkes-Barre last summer. Freda was an expectant mother and Bobby had promised to marry her.

WRITES LETTERS

Warden Ashe said Bobby wrote five letters today to friends and relatives. But he did not write to the girl for whose love he killed one who loved him.

He did not even speak of her before he died.

As the executioner waited in the death chamber, Edwards was reported to have purged his soul in a final confession to the prison chaplain.

In the confession the young church worker bared new details of the "American Tragedy" murder of the young mother of his unborn child.

"I wanted to be a minister," young Edwards cried. "I wanted to consecrate myself to God. This terrible mistake stood in my way. It would have disgraced me forever. I killed her because she stood in the way of righteousness."

"I don't fear death. I'm ready to pay."

"NOT THE GIRL TO WED"

Edwards was reported to have given an entire history of the crime, explaining his warring love for Freda and for Margaret.

New light is thrown on their "tryst kisses" mentioned in the letters that passed between them and on many other details of the strange dual passion that placed Edwards in the electric chair.

Regarding the actual circumstances of the murder, Edwards returned to the original confession which he partly repudiated in court—beginning with a week before Freda's murder last summer, when he first learned that she looked to him to save her from the consequences of their illicit romance—to marry her before she gave birth to their child. In his confession he said:

"I killed her—I might as well tell the truth.

"Freda was one of the best mixers I ever went out with, but she wasn't the kind of a girl a fellow marries.

"The first I knew about the baby was when she telephoned me at the mine office from Dr. Meyer's office. (This was a doctor who had informed the girl of her condition). She and her mother were there, she told me then. I said, 'When can I see you?' She said, 'Tonight.'

"I WAS NEARLY CRAZY"

"I was nearly crazy when she told me about that," Edwards declared. "I thought of Margaret, and I thought of my whole future. But I wanted to do the right thing, and it hadn't occurred to me then to do away with Freda.

"I told her, Freda, you can do one of two things. You can go to a doctor about it, or we can be married. I'll give you your choice, Freda.

"I was worried when she said she wanted to be married, and I intended to go through with it.

"I wrote a letter to Margaret and told her our engagement was off and that Freda and I were eloping.

"Later in the week, I went to Margaret's home at East Aurora to get my car, which had broken down when I went up a few days before. That's when I first got the idea to do away with Freda."

He then told of the tragic events on July 30, the rainy day when he murdered the girl of whom he had grown weary.

"Freda and I and her girl friend, Miss Culver, went out for a ride," he said. "We brought Miss Culver back to the city, and Freda and I were going to Edwardsville. But she said to me, 'Let's go out to Harvey Lake for a swim.'

"THEN I HIT HER"

"I said it was too cold, but she wanted to go out to the lake, so we went and I parked the car behind the ice house near Mayer's dock. She undressed in the car first and then I did.

"It was when I was undressing that the thought struck me I should do away with her because of her condition and my other girl.

"When I'd gone up to East Aurora for the car, I had put my Dad's blackjack in because I was driving at night and I wanted some protection.

"Freda was walking down to the water so I slipped the blackjack down inside my swimming trunks. Then I went down and swam for awhile. We talked about getting married and about our having a baby.

"The water was a little over four feet deep when she ducked down once and came up with her back to me.

"Freda's clothes were in the car. After I put mine on, I drove away back and left hers under a tree. Then I drove home after stopping to get a couple of chocolate bars for my mother.

"Then I went to bed. I didn't realize then what I'd done. I thought it would come out all right, because I intended it that way.

"Now, I see that I made a terrible mistake, and I am ready to pay for it.

"I trust myself to the mercy of the Almighty, and I am determined to meet death like a man."

At midnight Warden Ashe entered the section of the death house in which young Edwards was awaiting him. The trembling prisoner was allowed a final cigarette while his clothing was cut so the electrodes might be fastened against his flesh.

A few moments before 1:30 (E. D. T.) the warden shook hands with the prisoner, and sent him through the one-way door.

An hour and a half before the time set for Edwards to die Executioner Robert Elliott left a local farm house where he had had dinner, and drove to the prison. He reported to Warden Ashe and then went to the death house, where he examined the electrical equipment connected with the chair.

He gets $250 as his fee for throwing the switch.

WITNESSES CALLED

Then the dozen witnesses were summoned from the crowd at the prison gate-house, and Warden Ashe told them the regulations. He warned newspaper men witnesses against attempting to take photographs, and told them they must remain silent during the proceedings. Then the witnesses entered the death house.

The youth who was paying civilization's penalty for taking a human life sat in the chair as calmly as if he were sitting down to dinner.

Even his farewell scene with his father, Daniel J. Edwards, grim descendant of the old Welsh family for which his home town is named, the youth was as casual as if he were going away to college. They shook hands, talked in low tones, shook hands again, and the father whispered:

WILD LETTERS

That was all. The young slayer saw no other familiar face before he passed through the oaken doors to the death chamber, where the black mask and body straps were adjusted, and the state wrote, "finish," to an ugly crime.

Perhaps, in these last hours, he had another of the mystic trysts with "Momet," for it is part of the strange pathology of this case that he and Miss Crain pretended to be together, during their ill-fated courtship, when they were hundreds of miles apart. Then they wrote each other wild, yearning letters that remain in court records as evidence of the maelstrom of passion that led to Freda's slaying.

The electric chair—20 short steps away; the curling rheostat, with which inebriate executioner Robert Elliott regulated the wracking shocks of high-voltage current; the routine scurryings—these apparently meant nothing to "the kid."

It did not matter to him that a heavy rope had been drawn around the 12 witnesses' seats in the grey death chamber, or that the world was awaiting news of his death.

Death Rain

Rockview Penitentiary, Bellefonte, Pa., May 6 (INS)—The tragic chapters of Bobby Edwards life were punctuated with rain.

When he committed the crime that paralleled Theodore Dreiser's "American tragedy" last July 30, it rained.

When he was convicted of killing Freda McKechnie, it rained.

When the Supreme Court refused him a new trial, it rained.

The clouds again poured forth water when the state pardon board refused to commute his sentence to life imprisonment.

Today, when he was electrocuted, it rained.

Binghamton, N. Y., May 6—Margaret Crain, music teacher and the "Momet" for the love of whom Bobby Edwards slew and died, was sitting up with her mother and friends when the Pennsylvania youth went to his death in the electric chair early today.

The East Aurora girl was carefully guarded and no outsiders were permitted to get near her.

Her friends quoted her as saying that she believed young Edwards guilty of the murder of Freda McKechnie, for which he was convicted, but felt the extreme penalty was too severe and that he was too young to die.

'MARATHON' ON IN CONGRESS

By Associated Press

Washington, May 6—The legislative situation was being pictured in terms of an endurance contest today, as Congress entered another week with the Roosevelt program still moving slowly.

Word was circulated on Capitol Hill that President Roosevelt had indicated he had no objection to Congress staying in session all summer, if that was necessary to get his program passed.

With a smile, he was said to have remarked that the White House had an air-cooling system as well as the Capitol.

The Democratic chiefs said the White House had indicated a belief that the situation is not one to necessitate any compromise in the President's program.

Almost any day now, nature may begin to turn on the heat in Washington. When that happens, a congressman's fancy usually turns to home.

'BANKER GRAFT' ON BONUS HIT BY COUGHLIN

By Associated Press

Detroit, May 6—The Rev. Charles E. Coughlin watched the reaction today to an appeal he made last night for members of his National Union for Social Justice to demand passage of the Patman bonus bill by the Senate.

He urged his hearers to telegraph immediately to "your senators and tell them that it is your demand as one of their constituents that they support the Patman plan and not the graft plan ordinarily called the Vinson plan."

The Vinson plan, he said, will "put 81 pennies in the coffers of Wall Street for every dollar to be paid to the veteran." He did not mention the Harrison bill, forwarded as a compromise measure and drafted to escape the presidential veto which has been forecast for the other bonus bills.

"BONUS" FOR BANKERS

He asserted that the issue between the Patman and the Vinson bills is "whether or not a downright bonus will also be paid to bankers."

He described the Patman measure as "justice" and the Vinson bill as "graft—graft for the banker, still profiteering on the broken limbs and broken hearts of the American public."

Father Coughlin declared:

"The Patman plan, recognizing that we have $8,000,000,000 of idle gold and silver in the Treasury, asks the senators to use that idle gold and silver and issue against it . . . crisp new bills which 30 years from now will still be only $2,500,000,000 and not $4,500,000,000 as the Vinson plan prescribes.

"GRAFT FOR BANKER"

"The Vinson plan wants graft—graft for the banker, still profiteering on the broken limbs and broken hearts of the American public.

"In 30 years hence, according to the Vinson plan, we will owe the bankers approximately $4,500,000,000."

He termed the bonus agitation the "righteous demand" of the veteran for "their just wage" which they earned 10 times over."

Deluge of Bonus Wires Ascribed to Fr. Coughlin

By International News Service

Washington, May 6—An increasing flood of telegrams poured into senatorial offices today appealing for Senate enactment of the Patman bonus bill, which proposes to finance cash payment with the issuance of new money.

Senators ascribed the telegraphic deluge to the close vote and to the appeal which Father Charles E. Coughlin made yesterday in behalf of the Patman bill. Father Coughlin urged his hearers to telegraph their senators.

An incomplete estimate of 35,000 messages was made by telegraph officials today.

JAPANESE LAMP INJUNCTION HAILED

100 MILLION BULBS HALTED

By Universal Service

Los Angeles, May 6—American manufacturers of electric light bulbs today were commending a decision handed down by Federal Judge Paul J. McCormick barring the sale in this country of Japanese-made bulbs.

His decision was made here yesterday when he granted the General Electric Company an injunction directed against T. Asraku, the Tokio Lamp Company, the International Lamp Company and the Pacific Importing Company.

Under the judge's ruling the General Electric Concern may seek recovery from defendants of such damages as may have been caused by the past sale of Japanese bulbs in the United States. It was charged the sale of such lamps violated General Electric's patent, granted in March, 1922.

It covers an invention of Dr. Aladar Pacz in the company's laboratories at Nela Park, Ohio. His discovery insures production of a lamp filment which will neither sag nor offset during a normal useful life. All American-made lamps marketed by the General Electric and its licensees employ the Pacz invention, according to L. S. Lyon, patent attorney, who handled the suit.

He said Japanese bulbs are being sold at retail for ten cents for three, while American-made products ten cents each. Lyon declared the decision will halt the sale in this country of 100,000,000 Japanese-made electric bulbs.

'Dear Govt.'

By WINSTON NORMAN

Hon. Govt. Printer.
Wash, D. C.
Dear Mr. Printer:

I HAVE a Wonderful Plan that I will sell you cheap, it is an idea on teaching Politics to the children of the U. S. A.

So why don't you stop putting out the Congressional Record, & put Congress in the Funny Papers instead?

Last night my wife was talking & she says, "Our children are now 5 and 7 respectively, so it is time they give up Fairy Tails & begin more advanced reading, such as the New Deal. But my Heavens, they won't never look at anything but the Funnys."

Well, Mr. Printer, my wife give me an idea by accident, because all of a sudden I seen where Comic Strips was just the place for Congress, because all of the U. S. Kiddies reads the Funny Paper, beginning at 2½ yrs. of age & up to about 85.

* * *

TAKE for instance how my Plan would work on my boy Wilbur, age 7. Every morning at breakfast he says to me, "Please read the Funnys to me, daddy," so I could say to him, "alright son, what do you want first, Popeye or Jiggs or Congress?"

"I want Congress," he would tell me, & he would point at the 1st pitcher in the Strip and say, "Who is that man, daddy?"

So I would read the Educational Part that was wrote under the pitcher, a sample of which could be as follows:

"This is a Senator. He comes from Louisiana. Senators comes from Outlyeing Precincts, but this one comes from the most outlyeing precinct, he outlye all the rest of them put together."

* * *

SO THEN the 2nd pitcher would maybe be Mr. Bankhead, with something like this wrote under it:

"This is Rep. Bankhead from Alabama. He knows all about Cotton, but his little girl Tallulah don't never wear it. He put in the AAA Cotton Control Act, to Keep Cotton out of peoples wool socks."

The 3rd pitcher could be on somebody like Sen. Thomas from Oklahoma, & it would maybe say:

"Sen. Thomas from Oklahoma is a big Inflationist. An Inflationist is a hero that wants to give his country a good 5-Dollar Cigar."

* * *

WELL, I guess that is enough samples, Mr. Printer, you can see where the things Congress is doing would go over big in the Funnys, and a fine Education for children from 2½ to 85 yrs. of age.

So you can have my Plan real cheap, just write me out a check & I am

Yrs. truly, W. Norman

POPE PROTESTS HITLER 'WAR' ON CHURCH

By Associated Press

Vatican City, May 6—Pope Pius today voiced strong protest against Nazi Germany's treatment of 2000 young Catholics who returned to their fatherland after an Easter pilgrimage to Rome.

The Pontiff's protest came in the course of an address to 130 other German pilgrims.

He expressed the hope that they would receive "better treatment than their youthful predecessors."

(The official Osservatore Romano last week printed reports from Germany that the 2000 German Catholics returning to their native land were treated as political suspects, subjected to close questioning, stripped of their mementoes of Rome and held for a time in a concentration camp.)

His voice resonant, the Pope said:

"They went in the name of so-called positive Christianity to de-Christianize Germany, and they wish to conduct the country back to barbaric paganism, and nothing is left undone to disturb Christian and Catholic life.

"We hope," His Holiness adjured the listening Germans, "that upon your return to your country you will be treated better than those pious and splendid young (men), devoted and faithful to the church and to their country not long ago came to see me, their spiritual father.

"We remember them and speak of them with the honor due them from the Catholic and the civilized world."

GRIEF KILLS AGED MAN

Succumbs After School Teacher Ward Is Burned to Death in Hull

Although he survived fire and smoke that took the life of his ward, Miss Cecilia M. Beattie, 42, school teacher, David Frawley, 76, died in Hull today from shock and grief over her death. His death was pronounced due to a heart attack.

He was found dead in his bed by the Rev. Simon Londergan, pastor of the Catholic Church at Shirley, and his friend. It was on the priest's recommendation that Frawley took Miss Beattie and her brother, William James Beattie, into his home 40 years ago.

Awakened by the smell of smoke yesterday, Frawley found the charred body of his ward in her bed. He had summoned help, after first trying to brave the smoke and flames to rescue her.

Frawley collapsed and was assisted out of the Mountford road cottage in the Whitehead section of Hull by neighbors who called the fire department.

For many years, the school teacher cared for the aged man who reared and educated her. Through his benevolence, after the death of his wife, Miss Beattie completed her teachers' training at Bridgewater Normal School.

For 15 years the aged man and his ward came to Hull to spend the summers, until seven years ago, when they took permanent residence in the town. At that time, Miss Beattie was appointed to the Hull schools, where she taught the sixth grade.

Farm Job For 'Jim' Roosevelt

The eldest son of President Roosevelt let it be known today that he will run the dairy farm and forestry experimentation station of the family estate at Hyde Park, N. Y.

Young Roosevelt announced his plans after reports that he would go to work with his father in the White House. The White House has officially denied this.

"Jimmy" said he wants a crack at out-of-doors life for rest and recreation, as well as to learn accounting and farm management.

While taking the role of a farmer, Roosevelt will continue the insurance business he has conducted in Boston and New York. He will reside at Hyde Park.

James is 28 and attended Harvard University. He was active in his father's campaign in Massachusetts. His wife is the former Betty Cushing of Boston. They have no children.

The farm and country estate of the Roosevelts is recognized by President Roosevelt's mother and has been owned by the family for generations.

5 HELD AFTER FATAL FRAY

Springfield, May 6—As a result of the death of Albert H. J. Bemis, 24, following a fist fight, Gene Lagarski, 20, an amateur boxer, faced district court on manslaughter charges today.

He waived examination and was held in $10,000 for the grand jury.

Four companions of Lagarski were held as material witnesses. They were Francis Fuller, 20, Anthony Shepno, 20; Edward Desdeau, 24, and Reginald Porier, 23.

Lagarski, police charged, met Bemis Sunday as the latter was accompanying two girls on Main street.

After words were passed, the boxer allegedly struck Bemis on the jaw, knocking him down. Bemis hit his head on the sidewalk, but was able to go home, apparently uninjured.

The youth's mother was unable to arouse him yesterday, and a doctor ordered him sent to Mercy Hospital. On arrival he was pronounced dead of a compound fracture of the skull.

JOLSON, RUBY To Adopt Twins

New York, May 6—The population of the Al Jolson family is about to double any day now, for on Thursday Ruby Keeler, dancing wife of the mammy-crooner, will go to Chicago orphanage to pick out a pair of twins for adoption.

"Twins!

"Well, we both wanted to adopt a child," Ruby explained tonight, "but I wanted a girl and Al wanted a boy. So we may compromise—on both."

CHURCH BAN On Rouged Lips

London, May 6—A warning that communion would not be given women with scarlet-tinted lips was voiced by the Rev. Joseph Sunn, rector of Our Lady of Lourdes Roman Catholic Church in the Southgate.

"It is questionable if it is not actually breaking the rules of the fast," he said. "It is impossible to smear so much color on the lips without swallowing some of it."

PICKETS GUARD Garment District

G. O. P. LASHES ROOSEVELT; TO PLAN DEFEAT

By Associated Press

Chicago, May 6—Republican leaders from nine midwestern states today set June 10 and 11 for the "grass roots" party conference at Springfield, Ill., in a call for an "aroused America to give vigorous battle to the Roosevelt New Deal."

"The battle is not only to end the depression," said the call, "but also to preserve our very institutions."

Charging the Roosevelt administration had created conditions "so intolerable and so serious as to be beyond mere partisan politics," the committee laid out for the conference a two-fold task of formulating plans for rejuvenating the Republican party nationally and proposing a "constructive" program for the 1936 presidential campaign.

President Roosevelt was charged with having plunged the nation "into a series of fantastic and experimental schemes, the result of which has been to retard recovery and mire the country more deeply into despair.

"EVERY PLEDGE BROKEN"

The conference at the shrine of Lincoln, the committee said, will have nothing to do with candidacies "nor the personal ambitions of any men."

The Republican leaders declared every major promise made by President Roosevelt had been "broken and shamelessly repudiated" and said his record "presents such political perfidy as to shock the conscience and rock the very foundations of democracy."

"The Democratic party, as it has been known by its history, policies and declarations, has ceased to exist," said the announcement. "It has completely and abjectly ignored its obligations and abdicated in favor of Mr. Roosevelt and his retainers.

"Through Mr. Roosevelt's confusing, contradictory and uncertain policies, fear and a sense of insecurity have destroyed the confidence of the people and our mighty forces capable of producing recovery are bound and fettered.

"POWER OF KINGS"

"As proof of these statements, we have but to refer to the fact that our relief rolls have grown to the tremendous total of over 20,000,000 of our people.

"In admission of his failure, we find Mr. Roosevelt demanding, and obtaining, from a servile Congress the gigantic sum of $4,880,000,000 to be spent by him and his experimental advisers largely for undisclosed purposes.

"Never before has king, potentate or emperor been clothed with such vast and dangerous power. No other president has ever desired such unrestricted authority."

Hoover Scores New Deal; Says U. S. Isn't Zoo

By Associated Press

San Francisco, May 6—Creation of economic and social security through "regimentation" today bore the arraignment of former President Herbert Hoover that "our people are not ready to be turned into a national zoo."

Mr. Hoover in an address to the California Conference of Social Work last night assailed any attempt to make the government the major source of security efforts.

"You may produce an efficient economic or governmental unit by a manufactured regimented, imposed environment," he asserted, "but you will not produce a free individual . . . in short, you will not produce an American . . .

"Our people are not ready to be turned into a national zoo, our citizens classified, labelled and directed by self-approved keepers."

He and his remarks were given hearty applause by approximately 2000 delegates.

The former President said there was "far more than economic security if civilization is to march forward to social security."

"As a matter of economic security alone," he added, "we can find it in our jails. The slaves had it."

Gladys' 'Cat' Love War Dead

Stage Star in Truce With Hubby on Divorce Fight

By International News Service

New York, May 6—The "sick cat" controversy between Gladys George, actress, and her husband, Edward P. Fowler, died here today with scarcely a meow.

The stage star proclaimed a truce with her divorce-seeking husband by withdrawing her countersuit in which she charged him with misconduct with four co-respondents.

It was Penn with whom Miss George was accused of misconduct in the original divorce papers filed by Fowler.

She answered that Penn had been in her hotel room the night charged, but that he had merely been there to aid her in ministering to her ailing kitten.

The reported truce would seem to indicate that Fowler's suit will be uncontested, and that the Fowler-George case will take its place upon the Supreme Court's undefended matrimonial actions calendar—minus the "cat."

"IN THERE SWINGING"

I'M BUT ONE OF THOUSANDS of local baseball fans who rejoices the "Babe" has come home . . . that he has returned to the town where he began to make baseball history, and once more he is Boston's "own." We've always held him close to our hearts . . . even in the days he wore the Yankee spangles!

● Like thousands of other enthusiasts, I went out to the Field for the opening game, the first opportunity I've had to see a game for a long while. I wouldn't have missed that fifth inning for "all the tea in China!" Boy . . . oh, boy, just didn't that home run click off his bat and sail over Mel Ott's head into the runway between the stands!

● And as I left the field that day, the game safely tucked away in the Braves' win column, it occurred to me that the Babe can be an object lesson to all of us. However tough the going, no matter how much the crowd is roaring "strike him out," that stalwart athlete with nerves of iron is always in there trying his level best. He gives his all . . . in every inning.

● And, being president of the Waldorf System, I could liken our managers to "The Babe" . . . in there every minute, working like beavers to give better service and better food, and to make their restaurants better places in which to dine.

● I am proud of each one of our managers . . . their responsibility is tremendous and they do their work well. The Babe entertains thousands . . . they feed thousands and, while the applause for the Sultan of Swat is tumultuous, yet the fact Waldorf customers return again and again is in itself a measure of enthusiastic applause.

● The Babe, and these managers, each in their chosen field, are always "in there swinging."

A Thrilling Romance of Mighty Passion Unleashed to Build an Empire

By REX BEACH

Fighting Men, Lovely Women in Adventure

In the upstairs front room of the old stone house on St. Peter Street, New Orleans, at four o'clock of a February morning, Hannah Lincoln Pentecost delivered herself of an eight-pound boy.

The child was as ugly as the average newborn babe, but the exhausted mother pretended to see in him a likeness to his handsome father and so promptly she named him Steven.

Here in this room she had spent the first two weeks of her marriage to Steve Pentecost — the two happiest weeks of her life — then he had sailed away to seek his fortune.

Ever since it had been haunted by his memory, and now that memory had taken form in this wrinkled bit of humanity.

Hannah lay staring at the ceiling, her tiny baby cradled in the crook of her arm, and in a dumb anguish of yearning her thoughts reached out for its father.

Why didn't he come?

"Isn't there any news yet?"

Old Biddy Caldwell, the midwife, nodded cheerfully.

"Duval Armstrong was here and he says Steve will most likely land at Biloxi. He's probably on the way now. He'd never take time to come up river.

"You know that man, he'll arrive like a hurricane; or a thunderclap."

Biddy readjusted a pillow.

"He's too windy, if you ask me! Trouble with Steve is he never gets anywhere till just after he's gone.

"You'll never have him long at a time, dearie; he ain't that sort.

"But Steve's a better man than most, with all his crazy goings on, and you can't help but like him."

"I can't," Hannah smiled faintly. "I—I wish he'd come!"

Hannah's large dark eyes lifted, fastened themselves upon a patch in the ceiling where rain water had soak d through and stained the plaster.

It was a large stain and its discolorations created faint, irregular shapes which took on the appearance of faces or of landscapes.

During the long nights when she had faced the prospect of having her baby alone, Hannah had gazed at that spot, building into its shadows a little dream world of her own.

It had taken on for her a deep significance, had assumed a role in her existence. Steve's face was always there, and in the mazes of those wavering lines Hannah traced the course of his wanderings.

* * *

They had been married not quite ten months but to the woman it seemed an age.

Ruthless and Loving

Steve had brought the breath of far places with him and the spice of strange adventures.

He was one of those men to whom things happen and to whom the extraordinary becomes commonplace; a man of peculiar detachment, at one moment as loving and at the next as ruthless as a child.

Routine irked him, always he exuded restlessness.

He intoxicated Hannah and through his eyes she glimpsed a little of a world for which she had inherited a hunger all her own.

Hannah was teaching school when she first met Steve Pentecost, huge and blond and careless.

He had swept her off her feet. The very ease and confidence with which he fronted the world had been a challenge to her—that came from the pioneer blood in her veins, no doubt—and in him she saw something of her father and her grandfather.

Steve, to be sure, was gayer, more romantic, more dashing than any Lincoln, for the frontiers he trod were wider than theirs, but he had the same high courage, the same scorn for odds, the same heavy conquering hand.

They had met at a picnic.

Each had awakened in the other a peculiar amazement and delight—a sort of triumphant incredulity.

Steve was there . . . Hannah uttered a faint, piteous cry.

It was almost as if the one had long sought the other, fearing that they would never meet. There were no obstacles to their union. It was foreordained. Here indeed was something miraculous.

When he held her tight and kissed her, those desires culminated in an intense body hunger which drove her closer, caused her arms to tighten around his neck and left her lips bruised by his. It was a silent, almost savage surrender.

She could have wept at the recital of his emotions and even now, as she listened to the baby gurgling in its crib, she trembled at the memory of that first kiss.

It was cruel of him to leave her so soon, Fame!, Fortune! What did Hannah care for such things?

He had scrawled her three brief notes in nine months. Only three! He was seeking oil in Venezuela. He was on the track of a fabulous gold mine.

He was running wet stock to some half-starved patriots of some Central American country.

As Hannah dozed with half open eyes, that face in the ceiling assumed form, it moved down upon her. She was still spent and feverish; it seemed for an instant that the very power of her longing had conjured into being her lover-husband and that fuller wakefulness would resolve him back into the shadows.

But, no!

He was there. Standing at the foot of her bed. She uttered a faint, piteous cry and he vanished, reappeared. He was bending over her now.

Then he spoke and the sight was utterly washed out of Hannah Pentecost's eyes; blindly she pulled the big blond head down to her own and pressed her cheeks against it. When she felt herself encircled in his arms she wept hysterically. She kissed him again and again. All her resentment had fled, too, and in its place was an infinite tenderness.

She Realized

Yonder in the crib lay her child.

After their first incoherent greetings, neither spoke for a while. Steve put the child back in its mother's arms and gingerly trusted his weight upon the side of the bed.

"You've been gone a long time, Steve."

That was the limit of the wife's complaint—not so much a complaint either, as the description of a memory.

"As long for me, darling, as for you."

He kissed her again, he reached across her and let the baby's fingers encircle one of his own.

"He's a grand one, isn't he? He's going to have your good looks."

"Three letters in nearly ten months! And me a bride! Aren't you ashamed of yourself?"

"But—there wasn't anything to write, dear." Pentecost was perfectly sincere. "Nothing happened, honey. And you know how I hate to write. I figured you'd understand I was okay. But I loved your letters."

That was like Steve. Already Hannah understood him well enough to realize that in the simplicity of his soul, in the conscicusness of his own strength and resourcefulness it had not occurred to him that anyone might be concerned for his safety.

Hannah realized, too, that he had not worried in the slightest about her. His trust, his confidence was supreme.

"Aren't you going to tell me where you've been? What you did?" she inquired with a smile.

"Sure! As soon as I get through feasting my eyes on You. But there's no more to tell than there was to write."

Again they fell silent and looked at each other and smiled.

"What about that gold mine?" "There was a proud, a gentle tolerance in Hannah's eyes.

"Well, that was kind of funny. I got in with a bunch of Honduras Indians who don't like white people. Pretty wild and wooly lot."

"How did you get in with them?"

"Oh, I did 'em a favor."

"Yes?" In the tone of Hannah's voice there was a gentle nudge.

"You see I saved one of their women! She fell into some rapids. There was a deep lagoon below, and plenty of crocs —crocodiles, it was a bad place."

"And you got her out?"

"Sure. I was kind of stove up when it was over and they took care of me. I stayed with the tribe quite a while, in fact."

Hannah realized that already her husband had told a story out of which the average man would have made a book.

"Those fellows know where the gold is—the stuff that went into their temples years ago. They promised to show me where it came from, provided I went blind-folded.

"Afraid I'd find the place again, see? Well, I was smart. I had helped an old Spanish priest out of some trouble and he gave me a rosary."

Another adventure, the wife told herself. What a maddening man! But she'd pick it out of him.

"What did I do? I cut a hole in my pants pocket and on the way I dropped a bead through it every so often. Clever, eh?

"When the chief took the bandage off my eyes, believe me I felt pretty good. I knew the general direction we had come, those little beads would mark the turns.

"While I was still blinking, a barefooted Indian held out his hand to me and said, 'The senor drop' something. I pick 'em up. He had every last bead I dropped!

"The gold is there, all right. Some day I'll take another crack at it."

Steve sat on the edge of the bed with Hannah's hand in his until she fell asleep, then he kissed the dark circles under her eyes and tiptoed out of the room.

For two whole days he remained completely absorbed in the worship of his wife and child.

He seldom left the house. Hannah was happy, there was a new glory in her dark eyes, and when the baby was four days old she thought of getting up.

Steve enthusiastically proposed taking her around town, to celebrate, and subsided like a disappointed boy when Biddy Caldwell voiced an emphatic,

"No!"

Hannah, too, was peeved at the veto.

"Goodness, I feel fine," she asserted, "You'd think I was a weakling."

"I guess she knows better than we do," Steve said dismally.

It was Hannah's destiny to measure up to this superman of hers, to convince him that she was a true mate for him, so she complained:

"I'm strong. I'm healthy. This isn't the first baby ever born."

Hannah eyed him adoringly.

"I—I just want to prove I'm no handicap to you. Then maybe—

"What?"

"Maybe you'll take me with you wherever you go."

"But I'm never going anywhere again," he cried vehemently. "Only maybe on little short trips."

"Indeed! I know your little short trips . . . You really ought to settle down, dear. Young boys need their fathers. I'd make a sissy of ours."

"I'd drown him first," he declared. "He's going to be big and brave and—and all 'man.' I'll see to that."

"Where? In Patagonia?"

"Right here, in New Orleans: Duval Armstrong can get me a job with the fruit company. I know Spanish. I know the tropics. I'll be invaluable—"

"Oh, Steve! If you only would."

"I will. No more battling around for me. That's out! I'm the head of a family. I've got obligations. You wait, honey! I'll make money for you and the kid. That boy's going to be the richest boy in the country."

Steve Pentecost did not see his wife and baby again for nearly a year, for that night the path of adventure opened for him, fate carried him away on an enterprise more romantic, more exciting and more far reaching in its consequences than any even he had ever dreamed about.

What new adventures befall Steve? Where does his celebrations lead to? Continue this exciting new story in tomorrow's Boston American.

Steve Returns Home, But Not for Long

SYSTEM OF RUSSIAN ESPIONAGE HOLDS REDS IN BONDAGE

By R. H. SANGER

Harvard Graduate, Son of Colonel W. C. Sanger, Assistant Secretary of War Under Theodore Roosevelt.

Oppression has become a fine art in Russia. Never in the history of the world has there been such a high development of the technique of holding a majority in subjection.

THIS CLEVER AND RUTHLESS TECHNIQUE ENABLED THE SOVIET TO "HIDE" THE GREATEST FAMINE DISASTER OF MODERN TIMES, SO ONLY FROM THE WORLD BUT FROM ANY RUSSIAN UNTIL LONG AFTER IT HAD ENDED.

It is a technique which enables the rulers of the Soviet to present to the world a false picture of Russian conditions generally.

The same people who overthrew the Czar rule the Communist state. They do not make the mistakes of leniency which his government made. THE KNOW the forms which stifled opposition to a government will take, and they make sure that such underground opposition is crushed ruthlessly.

"Of course Russians want Communism," credulous Americans say. "It would be impossible otherwise for a handful of professional revolutionists to hold in subjection 165 millions of, persons. It just can't be done."

But it IS being done. It is done through the Red Army, the OGPU and the Communist party.

The party, having started with Utopian ideals, has degenerated into the most efficient organization in the world for gaining and maintaining power.

THE "SPY SYSTEM"

"With few exceptions, good jobs are open only to Communists. Clever, energetic, ambitious Russians, therefore, seek to join the party to advance themselves. To enter the party, they must pass a rigorous apprenticeship, being schooled to their masters' desires. They must learn to justify any crime "in the name of the world revolution."

By means of the rigid heirarchy of the Communist party, the two and a half millions cleverest and most energetic Russians have been robbed of their individuality and made into the unthinking servants of the handful of professional revolutionaries who control the happiness of 165 million Russians. "The oppression technique is welded into effectiveness by a "spy system" which reaches literally everywhere.

Behind this system, Siberia. The hint of it is enough to make starvation-weakened workers drain their last ounce of strength to avoid the charge that they "are not cooperating" in the building of the Socialistic state.

"PRISON" TERROR

I was not in Siberia but have had direct information which convinces me that in 1933 there were more than two millions of the TEN most ardent forced labor camp areas, and of these FORTY PER CENT died of starvation, hardship and malnutrition diseases during that famine year.

In Russia, these figures were challenged by several well-informed persons—as being too low.

The sight of a few "prison cars" upon a railway siding is enough to spread terror through an entire countryside. In fact, the Communists frequently move a few such cars into rural areas, along with a Red army contingent when, with fear, the falling strength of underfed peasants is being whipped in a harvesting drive.

Repeatedly, in America, I have been asked how news of the famine possibly could have been suppressed. The case of an able worker of my acquaintance threw light upon that, and upon the Soviet system.

At 30, he had risen to position as head of the trade union branch in a plant in heavy industry. With the director of the factory and the head of the local "party nucleus," therefore, he shared power in the "triumvirate" which ruled the plant. (This is typical, in all plants.)

During the winter and spring of 1933 the plant lost 12 per cent of its workers from starvation and production fell. Moscow sent officials to investigate production. The three were "on the carpet." In interminable discussion, every possible explanation except the true one was advanced.

EXILE FOR TRUTH

Finally my friend spoke out:

Why waste our time? Production fell because the men were too weak to work. Some walked barefoot in the snow because they had sold their shoes for crusts of bread. You expected them to carry on for eight, ten or even twelve hour shifts.

The session adjourned. My friend was investigated. His record was good. So he was dealt with lightly. He lost his post as trade union head and went to work at the lowest sort of job in the plant. But he was warned that any recurrence of that kind of talk would mean exile.

There are methods also of silencing Russians sent abroad.

Every Russian going out of the country must leave behind as hostage for his return, his family. If there is indiscreet talk about hardship, famine or oppression within the USSR he will be advised that his family has paid for his mistake by "being granted the privilege of Russian exile" on one of the nation's frontiers"—in other words, exile to Siberia.

If a foreign specialist is a single man he is likely to become acquainted with an attractive Russian girl who "happens" to be about. If he is married, his wife will be supplied with a helpful and winning companion.

If, leaving USSR, he speaks or writes in unfavorable terms, a Communist agent may then outright suggests that the "girl friend" (or cook) is the source of his information, or he will be "held responsible." Or, if a departing engineer has no such "contacts" and talks, he will be hazed as a drunken, ad worthless fellow.

By a incredibly intricate system, tourists and sometime students are now being convinced that they see all. Actually, only the "tourist track" is kept painted, repaired, as free as possible from beggars, and completely cleared of all evidences of starvation.

Tourist guides—a sort of tourist OGPU—are trained by special schools in the plausible lies they are to tell visitors.

As an example of this newly developed technique, guides will start with a group for Village 'A, "discover" that they cannot reach it; and with every appearance of "accidental" selection, pick Village B, which has been stocked up and is well supplied with bread.

Russians do not emigrate and bring the truth with them simply because they cannot leave. To get a visa, a Russian must be "politically correct" and pay $400 in gold. The owner of so many rubles couldn't be "politically correct."

There is a spy in every Russian household in which a foreigner is living.

If the visitor is important, an agent of the OGPU moves in as a lodger or member of the family. In most cases, however, the family taking a lodger is forced to do the spying.

The secret police will not that the family is profiteering in rent and food; it is a serious offense, but it will be overlooked if a daily report is made of the activities, conversations and acquaintances of the visitor. If the family proves the visitor a "class enemy" there will be rewards.

PHONE ESPIONAGE

It is my conviction that the personnel of the Moscow phone system is one-fifth a part of the spy system. At first, I was mystified by a series of clicks which accompanied my phone connections. Later, I learned that the clicks were caused by the call being routed through the "spy room" of the phone change.

If I started talkingn ins Russia, then switched to Enaglish, there was a click as the call went through the English spy room. If I change to French, another click.

One day I tried speaking the few words of Amharic I learned on a trip to Abyssinia. The noise of clicking was frightful, as the operator tried to determine what language I was speaking. Then the call was shut off.

Last spring I sat in a Communist schoolroom several hundred kilometers from Moscow. Weak and underfed children were acting out a play picturing the horrors of life under capitalism, and the benefits of the Communist regime.

Such is the falseness of Communist propagandad in Russia, and before the world. And this is the system Communists wish to see imposed by force upon America.

SAN DIEGO FAIR GLORIFIES COAST

San Diego, May 6 (US)—California history in brilliant pageantry will be brought to life during the California Pacific International Exposition, opening in Balboa Park, San Diego, on May 29 and continuing to November 11.

Spanish explorers, venturing along an unknown coast and braving the dangers of a new land; mission fathers and heroic padres, playing their part in the story of California; pioneers, miners, cowboys, all the colorful early history of the state will be presented in vivid reenactment of the days of old.

The picturesque atmosphere of Spanish California will rest upon the entire exposition. The buildings themselves are of Spanish renaissance architecture, with courtyards filled with flowers, their long colonnades shaded by exotic trees. Palm-lined patios will offer a restful contrast to the exhibits of the latest scientific and mechanical wonders.

A unique exhibit, contributing to the story of Southwestern history, is a replica of the Taos Pueblo of Mexico, now under construction, in which Indians will display their wares, their weapons and their mods of life.

STALIN DRAFTS NEW RED CODE

By International News Service

Moscow, May 6—In one of his most important speches in years, Josef Stalin today announced what is held by Soviet authorities to constitute a virtually new philosophy of the Soviet Union.

Communism, they said, removal of emphasis upon machines and greater humanity toward the masses of workers.

The old slogan of the Soviet Union, "Technique Is Everything" —technique meaning technical equipment in Russian phraseology —is now outworn, Stalin said. Replacing it, he declared, must be a new cry, "Men are everything."

By "cadres" the Soviet Union understands trained personnel in both high and low ranks. In other words, the men behind the machines.

The Russian dictator announced the new policy in addressing graduates of schools and staff colleges of the Red Army.

"It is true," he said, "that we had to trample certain comrades under foot, but this was unavoidable and I confess I myself lent a hand.

"Now we have passed from a period of famine in the domain of technical equipment and entered a period of famine in the domain of untrained men."

North Shore Flock Prepare for Social Season

By BETTY ALDEN

AS THE SEASON wears on, it will become our pleasant duty to journey many, many times up along the North Shore . . . in fact as we cover horse shows, garden openings, fairs and teas, the Cape Ann trip will become almost a matter of course . . .

We will always remember, however, our first trip of this season to the North Shore, which we took yesterday . . .

Gloucester was our destination . . . where the round the world cruising schooner, "Yankee," was due to make port in the early afternoon, but along the way the salty breezes of Manchester and Magnolia wafted us special bits of news about early season doings of the social set which are so identified with those communities . . .

The shutters are being removed from Mrs. Frederick Winthrop's country estate nearby in Hamilton, in readiness for the exodus of the whole Winthrop family from their brown stone mansion on Berkeley street, to the shore for the summer . . .

The new granddaughter of Mrs. Winthrop is now ensconced with her father and mother, the junior Frederick Winthrops, in their Hamilton home, and naturally grandmother will find it easier to include a visit to the new baby in her daily routine after she moves to the shore . . .

* * *

SERITA BARTLETT

ALSO THERE IS MUCH excitement in the air in anticipation of the marriage on July 3 of Nat Winthrop to Serita Bartlett . . . both of the principals in this match have been leaders of the younger set on the North Shore for several years and all their friends are hoping that they will decide to continue to live in their midst . . .

Rolling past the smooth green golf links of the Essex County Club, the many shiny cars entering its long driveway reminded us that this exclusive rendezvous of society in the summer months had only the day before opened its doors for the season . . . Mrs. Dick Lawrence is again in charge of the hospitality committee of the club . . .

The few large yachts which have come North already for the season and were riding the sun-capped waves in Marblehead harbor yesterday reminded us that another nice boat which is registered under very distinguished social register names will soon be making into some North Shore port with its owners aboard . . . Mrs. Phineas Shaw Sprague has gone to Virginia to sail back with Mr. Sprague on their lovely yacht . . . Though they usually spend their summers in Maine, visits at the various swanky ports along the shore are included in their sporting program for the season . . .

* * *

Return From Europe Soon

BEFORE THEY TAKE UP their summer residence in Peterborough, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Parker will have to make the westward passage across the Atlantic . . . they have been sending home to their daughter and son-in-law, the Robert Bartons, glowing descriptions of their journeys through Spain this spring . . . The Salem mansion of the Parkers has been occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Barton (Sally Parker) during their absence in Europe . . .

It is putting it mildly to say that the returning globe trotters aboard the schooner Yankee had a happy landing yesterday . . . Captain Irving Johnson, youthful explorer, owner and skipper of the "Yankee," with his wife, a former Rochester, New York, society girl, steered his pretty white craft into the dock where a crowd of relatives and friends were waiting to welcome the travellers as they touched home soil for the first time in 18 months . . .

After a cruise replete with exciting adventures in distant corners of the globe the Yankee arrived in Gloucester exactly 18 months to the day and hour from the time she set sail on a windy November afternoon on her cruise of adventure and excitement . . .

Romance pervaded the decks of the schooner as she plied lazily between the tropical islands of the South Seas . . . Betty Schuyler, a society girl of Rochester, New York, came back betrothed to Roland Wentzel, an artist of New York who took the trip to get "color" for his paintings . . . He eagerly announced to inquiring friends that as soon as he finds a job in New York the wedding date will be set . . .

* * *

Mrs. Guy Currier Postpones Return

MRS. GUY CURRIER has postponed sailing back to her home shores so that when she does arrive she will go directly to Peterborough to open her famous country home there for the summer . . . Doing a little long distance business from Italy and France, where she has been all winter, Mrs. Currier has let her log cabins in Dublin and her Mt. Vernon street apartment for the summer . . . Her daughter, Mrs. Robert Steinert, will occupy one of the cottages at Mariarden, Mrs. Currier's Peterborough estate, with her children for the summer . . .

Lydia Fuller

* * *

Doing a little travelling also is Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller who went over to New York the other day with her daughter Lydia . . . Mrs. Fuller will be back in time for the meeting of the Christopher Shop Pops committee at her home today but Miss Lydia has something up her sleeve, like looking for a job or taking a course in dramatics . . .

THE RIDDLE OF THE FLORENTINE FOLIO—By E. S. Liddon—Doubleday, Doran.

This triple murder mystery should satisfy those who demand an intricate net of clues—both false and true—and a perfectly fitted piece of jig-saw deduction.

When Peggy Fairfield, a fair young amateur detective, opens the Florentine folio after the murder of Miss Ophelia Clifford in her old Southern mansion, the real mystery has only just begun.

Through the eyes of her faithful stooge, Miss Kemp, who tells the story, the reader is given more than a fair hint to the ending, albeit, somewhat clouded by a good many false hints.

The story must stand on its claim to be only another mystery story, but it is a good one.

BEAUTY FOR ASHES—By Grace Livingston Hill—Lippincott.

Those who have read one or more of Mrs. Hill's previous 40 odd novels will need not be told that this story which begins in sadness and tragedy will end on a high Pollyanna note of happiness.

It is the story of Gloria's way "back to normalcy" after her husband-to-be is found shot in the room of a dancer a week before their wedding day.

In addition to Gloria's ordeal, Vanna, her sister, is also faced with the sorrows of this world. But at the end, both Gloria and Vanna have found a new life in new loves.

ADVICE on LOVE by BEATRICE FAIRFAX and NELL BRINKLEY

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

SOUNDS LIKE A HEROINE TO ME

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

She is 17 years old, working, and is the main support of her family. I asked her to go "steady" with me for two months, and if she hasn't grown fond of me at the end of that time, we could break up.

She told me that her mother does not approve of her going "steady" with anyone at this time, as she's too young. Shall I talk to her mother personally, or wait till the two months have expired? I have a steady job and am 22 years old. Does the girl really care for me, or is she just "stalling?" M. P.

Any girl of 17 who is the mainstay of a family could hardly consider a boy seriously unless she decided to leave her family flat. It's a pretty heroic type of girl who acts as "the man of the family" at this tender age, and if you're seriously in love with her, she seems well worth waiting for.

Meantime, why don't you two continue as good pals?

* * *

SHALL A WIFE TALK TO THE "OTHER WOMAN"?

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

My husband told me he was going to leave me and the children for a girl who is only a year older than our oldest child. He says everyone loves young and beautiful things in this life, birds, flowers, young animals. Everything old should be discarded for new. Finally I discovered this woman who has charmed him. She is living apart from her husband. She is hard, and looks like the type you couldn't reason with. But I'm asking you—do you think it would be wise for me to go and talk to this girl?

I cannot stand the way my husband acts around the house. I will give him up if his happiness depends upon it, but it would be terrible for me, as I still love him dearly, and can't bear to see the way this affair has wrecked his life. SORROWFUL WIFE.

To be practical, you should see whether this infatuation is temporary or not. A man in the grip of a home-wrecker is almost as pitiful an object as the wife whose home is being wrecked. It's a sort of middle-aged madness that often subsides.

You have been married to this man long enough to have grown children. Have patience a little longer, and see if he doesn't come through this folly. Middle-aged admiration is never enough for gold-diggers. Blessed be poverty under these circumstances.

Bridge

One Objective

By MRS. CULBERTSON

There is only one objective in the mind of the advanced player when he is defending against an opposing game contract, and that is the defeat of the contract.

This is well shown in the interesting hand submitted to me by a fellow bridge lover from across the seas, Mr. Ivar Anderson of Stockholm, Sweden.

East, Dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

	♠ 3 ♡ 9 4 ◇ 10 9 7 5 2 ♣ K Q 10 8 4
♠ K 9 6 ♡ K J 10 8 6 2 ◇ K 8 4 ♣ 9	North West East South	♠ Q J 5 ♡ Q 7 3 ◇ A Q J 6 ♣ A 3 2
	♠ A 10 8 7 4 2 ♡ A 5 ◇ 3 ♣ J 7 6 5

The bidding:

East	South	West	North
1 ◇	1 ♠	2 ♡	Pass
3 ♡ (1)	Pass	4 ♡	Pass
Pass	Pass

(1) Although East has close to a minimum opening bid, he must treat his partner's response as forcing for one round.

With only one spade stopper, East chooses to raise his partner's suit rather than bid two notrump. However, even had East bid two notrump, West would still have gone to four hearts rather than three notrumps.

North opened the spade three, a low card was played from dummy, and South won with the Ace.

His partner's lead of the spade three was marked as a singleton, and consequently he knew that he could give his partner an immediate ruff.

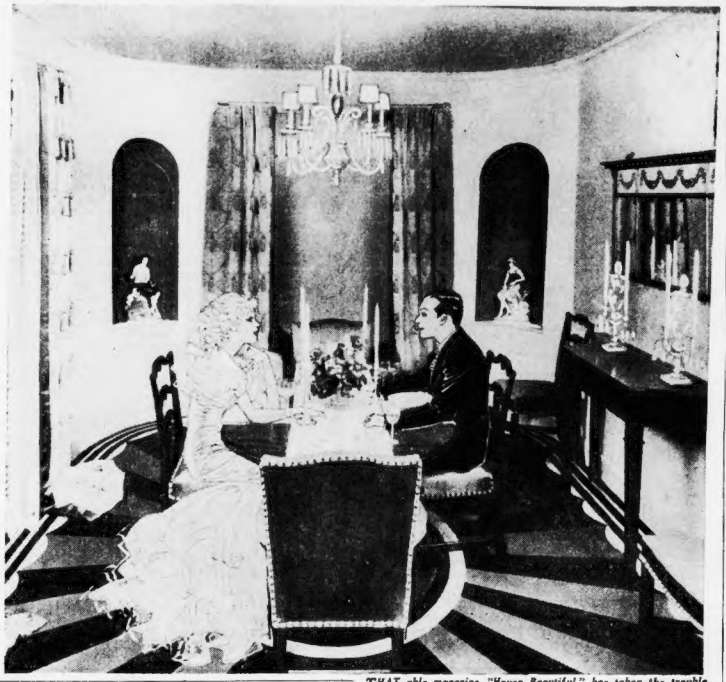
At Trick 2 he led the diamond three and by so doing hoped to leave his partner with a trump entry to give himself the diamond ruff.

The play worked out just as South had hoped. East won the diamond lead in dummy and led a low heart.

South jumped up with his Ace, and then led the low spade which his partner ruffed. A diamond was returned and South ruffed, and the contract was defeated.

A Beautiful Bride's House

By Nell Brinkley



THAT able magazine, "House Beautiful," has taken the trouble, for the benefit of the public, and, particularly, the newly married, to install at 444 Madison Avenue a service of ideal rooms, showing "House Beautiful's" ideas of a beautiful house.

The following details concerning the room were supplied to this page by Miss Sylvia Grace, to whom I am much obliged.

"The dining room of the Bride's House is simple, dignified Eighteenth Century. The corners of the room have been rounded off, and niches set into the curves, lined with fuchsia to give warmth to the grey papered walls. The mahogany table is oval, repeating the curve of the room. The chairs are upholstered in fuchsia satin. The formal note in the room is expressed in the heavy grey quilted and tasseled draperies. And the five-candle crystal chandelier."

Any young bride and groom could be happy in a beautiful room like this. Also they could be just as happy, and might be happier, in the simplest two-room bungalow or apartment. The main thing is, GET MARRIED; do not waste life's young, happiest years.
—BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

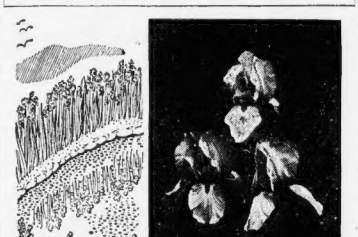
IRIS FOR SMALL GARDENS



EASY TO GROW, MARVELOUSLY DECORATIVE

IRIS—Beautiful rainbow flowers! Do you really know what a "pot of gold" they are?

White, pink, red, blue, lavender, purple and yellow—no wonder a great border of these flowers in mixed colors suggested the name of iris—a rainbow!

Iris increases very rapidly. Starting with a single plant this spring, you may easily have dozens of plants of that variety in four or five years. There are literally hundreds of varieties to choose from, and it is certain you can grow some kind of iris successfully, no matter where you live.

The best known variety is the common garden iris that starts blooming in March and April, and reaches its peak in May. This is the variety we have pictured for you. Then there are the Siberian and marsh varieties, whose bloom overlaps and follows the common iris. The Japanese iris blooms still later, in late June and July.

Almost all iris grows well in shade, but does not bloom so well there. Many gardeners plant it in shade for the value of its foliage. For bloom, give the plants full sunlight. Garden iris likes to dry out in midsummer, and is therefore particularly fine for drought sections and hillsides.

Siberian and marsh iris will grow either in water or in a dry border. Japanese iris likes moisture with perfect drainage in a Northern exposure; but will thrive along the edge of water in a Southern exposure.

Medicated Cosmetic

Healing Ointment Clears Skin

By JULIET SHELBY

DEFINITELY I possess a penchant for choosing medicated cosmetics rather than those preparations that just dress up the skin and add a little allure.

To me it seems far more important that girls and women should learn to keep their health and, incidentally, their youth, than it is for them to know about the latest shade of lipstick.

You see, the dress-up cosmetics are of little use if your skin is not healthy or if your eyes lack the sparkle of normal vitality. And if your skin is blemished, even slightly so, you should get at the root of the evil.

* * *

Girls who suffer from an acne condition should sacrifice cosmetics and other little feminine varieties and save their pennies for excellent treatments by a reliable physician.

All girls who have allowed their skins to become blemished through sheer neglect should shake themselves into action and go in for concentrated skin care.

And don't present the argument that you work too hard. The talented, hard-working Helen Hayes no sooner finishes a picture in Hollywood than she is back on Broadway to delight other audiences. Yet she has retained health and a sparkling vitality, not to mention a youthful, smooth skin that has not the slightest blemish!

* * *

For a neglected or blemished skin, you need first an antiseptic healing ointment. Such a lotion should be used religiously day and night until the skin has cleared. During the time of application used no other creams on your face. Give it a chance to heal and smooth the skin texture. This excellent ointment may be had for little money and it is most efficacious. It banishes the occasional blemish as well as more serious skin eruptions.

* * *

If you would like to know the name of this healing ointment, call Miss Shelby, Liberty 4000.

If you prefer writing for this information, send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to her in care of the Boston Evening American.

Identifying Your Silver

MONOGRAMMING your silver is largely a matter of your own taste and feeling, according to House Beautiful. After all, monograms have been made now for 16 centuries and it stands to reason that a wide variety should have been approved in that great span. You may mark on the back or the front of your silver. You may use your maiden initials, or your married ones, or a combination including both yours and your husband's. Your grandmother frequently had her first or her last name written out in full and one of the most prominent silver houses in America reports occasional such orders still.

Chiffon Pies Delectable Hot-Weather Treat

By MARTHA LEE

From Martha Lee's Monday Morning Broadcast Over Station WAAB

ALTHOUGH PIES are thought to be ideal winter fare, "pie eaters" need have no fear of the approaching warm months, for at this time of the year we turn to the light, fluffy type of pie—the chiffon pie.

Such a vogue as the chiffon pie is having at the present time! Interested males no longer ask "can she bake a cherry pie," but "can she make a chiffon pie."

Any flavor can be turned into one of these delightful affairs. Right at this time strawberry and rhubarb are being made more than any other.

We are passing along to you a Sherry Wine Pie, served in a corn flake crust, made at our Cooking School this week. It was voted the perfect pie, for delicacy and flavor. A baked pastry shell can be used.

SHERRY WINE CHIFFON PIE

1 cup milk
½ cup sugar
3 egg yolks
3 egg whites
1 tablespoon gelatine.
4 tbsps. cold milk
½ cup sherry wine
¼ tsp. salt
Pinch of grated nutmeg
1 cup whipped cream

Combine the milk and sugar and heat to the boiling point. Place in a double boiler, add the well beaten egg yolks, nutmeg and salt. Stir constantly. Add the wine slowly and the gelatine which has been soaked in the 4 tbsps. of cold milk. Cook this mixture until it coats a spoon. Cool slightly and fold in the stiffly beaten egg whites, let cool until firm and blend with the whipped cream. If you wish to add an attractive touch to the color of the pie, divide the filling in two parts and add a few drops of red coloring to one-half. Make the first layer in a baked pie shell of the plain cream filling, on top the tinted layer. Cover with sweetened whipped cream and chill again before serving.

Answers TO BEAUTY Queries

Question—I have big pimples all over my back and would appreciate some advice. At times there seems to be a blackhead in the center of the pimple.
A. C. B., Belmont.

Answer—If you will write to me again, enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope I will be glad to send you my Tar-Sonyx Yeast treatment leaflet. This treatment is ideally suited for clearing up blemished backs. Your skin should show a decided improvement in a week's time if you follow directions faithfully.

Question—I am a high school girl and am very flat chested for my age. I am now seventeen. Have you any advice to offer regarding this condition? If so, how soon should development begin to show. Is it safe to use creams for the purpose of building up the bust?
Audrey F., Medford.

Answer—Girls of your age should not worry about figure development. You are still in the growing stage, and it sometimes happens that certain parts of the body develop, while others don't. In due course of time, the chances are that proportions will right themselves. Cultivate a good posture and always keep your shoulders thrown back. Your chest will develop in time. The only application I have ever recommended is cocoa butter. Warmed cocoa butter will sometimes help in filling out hollows.

Lucy Seems a Stranger

CHAPTER 10

"Are you Chase? Thought you answered the general description Lucy gave me. She told me to tell you you would find her in her cabin. She traveled out in our party."

"Thanks," said Stephen, moving off, so happy that their meeting was to be private, happy that Lucy wished it to be. He hurried below to find her.

"Lucy!" he had cried, flinging open her cabin door.

He paused there at the door the distance of the cabin between them, checked suddenly in his eagerness for she was motioning him back with an appealing gesture. Thus they stood on opposite sides of the cabin as if in a trance, while that impetuous first moment he had imagined so often slipped away, leaving him exposed to her gaze.

Lucy a Stranger

Until that moment he had been entirely unconscious of himself, all the unhappy broodings of the past year forgotten, his life of travel and isolation put aside, Lucy and he picking up their lives where they had left them three years ago.

But now Lucy suddenly seemed a stranger to him, not the familiar girl of those last days together, days relived a thousand times along the cut trails of Manchuria. She was older, more finished in appearance.

All the superficial external changes seemed not superficial but real changes in Lucy herself. Even her clothes, different from anything he had been accustomed to in out-of-the-way Manchuria, made her a part of the outside world, lost to him.

Thrust into it suddenly he felt an uncertainty that made him unable to take the lead, sweeping Lucy forward into a new contentment. So he had stood waiting, too submissive to her mood he thought now. Suddenly he had felt a little gauche despite his correct attire.

Into this growing uncertainty of himself her words had fallen with finality: "Stephen, I can't. I'm afraid. I'm sorry. I thought I could go through with it. When your cable came everything seemed to be all right again. And then I was excited, getting ready. But as I have lain here night after night in my bunk, I've known really—though I kept thinking maybe when you came . . . But, Stephen, I know now I don't love you."

"I Don't Love You"

"Don't you think," he managed to say, "it would be different after a little? If I gave you time? If we waited a few days for our marriage?"

"Please, Stephen, don't. I can't stay over. My friends are going on, Stephen. I don't love you. I haven't since . . ." She had not finished, but he had understood what she meant, that suspicion of him lay at the core of her love.

Well, he had freed her.

He had managed to speak naturally, he guessed, though his voice felt dry in his throat. He didn't want her to be unhappy over him. He mustn't let her know his hurt. "I won't hold you," he had said. "You're free."

Then for a moment his heart had leaped; she seemed to be looking at him in the old way—love for him in her eyes. Just for one instant he had thought maybe she'd loved him. Then, as she speaking, hardly detected, her voice drowned in the happy greetings of people in the corridor outside?

They moved on. The cabin was very quiet. There had been no sound from Lucy. Without looking back he had plunged forward while he had strength to go.

Now he had stopped at a little Japanese hotel high up in the mountains. How he had got here he hardly knew. Tramped most of the way, he guessed.

As he stared at a calendar hanging on the wall of the Japanese hotel where he had stopped, it came over him what day of the month it was, and that his leave was over. He tried to wrench his mind free from Lucy, so that he might think of his return.

Suddenly he saw that return in its reality. The little white man's town, with its ingrowing interests, its prying eyes! The women over their teacups, whispering. The men at the club, smiling.

What should he do? It never occurred to him to take Jim's advice to return to America. Work, like love, was rooted deep in him. He would go back to his work, but he would go back married.

As Jim said, no one out here married the woman he would have if he'd stayed at home. It would be unfair to Lucy. Lucy, who had made the marriage of convenience. Coldly he made his decision.

He had no doubt but that he could arrange such a marriage within the next few days. It was done too often in the East.

In Harbin it would be the easiest thing in the world. Americans had the reputation among the Russians of making good husbands. He could pick up a Russian wife very quickly there. For a moment he entertained the idea of going to Harbin; then he knew that wouldn't do—the news would get around Manchuria. But undoubtedly it could be done in Yokohama, too.

The adventurous among women the world over knew that men coming into the port cities from the Interior of China and Japan longed for white women's companionship. Often a man married a girl a few days after meeting her.

With sudden self-assertiveness he wired the boss that he had been unavoidably delayed. Then he set off for Yokohama.

Tweed-Knit Sports Coat

By Annice Brink

QUITE AS NICE as owning a hand-loomed tweed is having one hand-made of tweed-yarn, especially when you have the assurance that yours has been designed in Paris. Paray contributed the clever wing closing and the smart lines of this seven-eighths length sports coat for which you may have knitting directions. It is just the thing for the race-meets to come, when even a mild June day is apt to rouse a breeze with a sharp slap in it. It will lag along helpfully to the beach or the mountains. And remember to roll it lightly and tuck it into a chest drawer, instead of hanging it, so that it will retain its figure. For directions, write to Annice Brink, Fashion Editor, Boston Evening American, enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman on Manners

NOTE OF THANKS TO PATRON SENATOR

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

1—Recently a friend of mine from another state sought the aid of two senators in securing a job. Through the efforts of these senators, he was fortunate enough to secure the position for which he applied.

Would a letter of appreciation and thanks to them be proper, or should he again see them and personally thank each one?

2—If a letter would be proper, please give me some idea as to how it should be worded. W.

1—Under these circumstances it would be in excellent taste for your friend to write a letter of thanks to each of these senators, and it would probably be more convenient, for all concerned, to write letters rather than to make a personal call.

2—The letters might be worded something like this: Dear Senator Worthington:

May I thank you, deeply and heartily, for your great kindness to me in helping me secure the position of ——— (state here what the position is).

I appreciate more than I can tell you your efforts in my behalf, and I assure you that I shall do everything in my power to make my accomplishment in this position worthy of your very kind recommendation.

Again my sincere thanks, sir, and my best wishes.

Very sincerely yours,

(Mrs. Beeckman will be glad to answer questions on Good Manners submitted by readers.)

STATE POLICE SURPRISE MADGE

By ADELE GARRISON

CHAPTER 237

IT WAS the voice of authority that spoke to us from the path behind us.

I recognized that before I wheeled and saw the state trooper I had seen look so searchingly at our car when he and his comrade had passed us on the road.

How he had reached us so quickly I could not imagine.

Either he had definitely suspected us of something which called for investigation by the law, and by something savoring of the uncanny had guessed where we were and doubled back to intercept us, or in the pursuit of something else he had come upon us by chance.

I remembered an old, slangy aphorism of Lillian's which was frequently upon her lips in the old days. "Never tip your mitt," she used to say, and add as frequently: "A good bluff is an ever-present help in the time of trouble."

Fortified, if not heartened, by these memories, I drew myself up to my full height and spoke with all the dignity of a woman not used to harsh speech, and grievously offended by it.

"I fail to understand your meaning. Surely you are not presuming to question me in that tone."

"Sorry you don't like the tone, sister. But you see we rough, rude men get so used to being tough that we just naturally can't remember to pull our punches when we really ought to. Now if you'll just tell me what particular tone you'd like—basso, baritone, tenor—no, I think I draw the line at tenor—I'll sing you my little song in that range."

Ronald stepped from behind me, his face flaming, his voice hoarse with anger.

"If you dare to make game of this lady again," he began threateningly.

"Look here, young feller," said the trooper, "if you know what's good for you and sister here, you'll shut your trap and keep it shut until I tell you to open it. You don't seem to realize that I've got you folks dead to rights, and I don't intend to have any back talk from you. Because I stood for a little high hat comedy from sister doesn't mean that I'm going to take any rough stuff from the boy friend."

BAITING RONALD

"Oh!" Ronald choked. "I'll kill—"

"Hush! Hush! I said frantically, fearing I knew not what from the dynamite which Ronald's fiery temper might explode.

Then I pulled him around so that he was compelled to look at me.

"You are making things terribly hard for me," I said severely. "Won't you please shut your ears to anything he may say, and let me handle this. There is something here I don't understand, and you are giving me no chance to find out what it is."

Ronald choked out something about not being able to stand hearing the trooper speak that way to me, and then added huskily:

"But I suppose you're right, and I'll keep quiet, if it kills me."

"That's right, sister; gentle him," the trooper drawled. And though Ronald clenched his fists and quivered as if he had been struck with a lash, he did not speak again, and the trooper moved toward us swiftly, stopping when he reached the big car and looking it over carefully.

This Is Life
by ROBERT E. ROGERS

Sometimes I wonder what our psychologists think they are up to.

Increasingly the public prints give us news of questionnaires which they are trying out on college students and young educators still in the larval stage.

What they intend to learn and what validity is expected from the answers constitute a great mystery.

Some years ago you may remember Smith College asked its young women certain highly intimate questions about the sex life of Robert E. Rogers these young women, thus arousing a pretty general indignation among the parents and friends of the girls.

Now Dr. Edward L. Thorndike, professor of education at Columbia, is trying to find out what a group of eminent teachers would do in the way of degrading themselves for a million dollars. The questions and replies are almost beyond belief.

The questions were given to both men and women and the professor reports that he finds the women more moderate than the men, but also more adventurous and curious—at least on paper.

How much money would you ask for if you were to give up all your hopes of a happy hereafter? I am not sure whether this means merely a happy life in this world, or in the world to come. Anyway, the average woman of the group would sell out for $10, whereas a man wouldn't compromise for less than $1000.

Cannibalism

How much money would you ask to be willing to give public evidence of cannibalism on your part? You may remember that Joseph Conrad wrote a whole novel, "Falk," upon the effect of such a memory on a human being. The average man figured it out at 260 million, the average woman at something like a million and a half dollars.

What would you take to spit on George Washington's picture? Fifty per cent of the younger people would do it cheerfully for ten dollars, whereas over 66 per cent of the older crowd, over 40, wouldn't do it for less than ten thousand.

Women were more merciful than men in the matter of cruelty to animals. A man wouldn't choke a cat or stick a pig for under $2500, whereas the women held out for over one hundred thousand dollars, presumably gold standard.

And so on and so on.

More Difficult

It is difficult to find words to express the utter futility and imbecility of such questions and such replies.

One gathers from the press reports that Professor Thorndike is of the opinion that younger people are essentially more hard-boiled, more callous, more irreverent and more defiant of public opinion, while the elder people are more in dread of Mrs. Grundy.

Also that men are more careless of said Mrs. Grundy and Emily Post than the women in minor matters, while being far more conservative than women in matters of basic idealism or traditional abhorrence.

But these are mere guesses, not only on the professor's part but on the part of the human guinea pigs answering the questions. It is, of course, impossible for anyone to answer such questions honestly or truthfully. A hypothetical question of such a sort settles nothing except an individual's capacity at rank spoofing of the instructor or for self-deception. No human being's testimony on such matters is worth a fig.

Enjoy It

Edison used to like that kind of hypothetical query for his "college entrance" examination, trying to judge a boy on the basis of his testimony as to what he should do in some complex, highly artificial and improbable situation.

From a more serious angle we can see our college students taking pledges not to fight for their country under any condition, a pledge utterly impracticable when one considers the part played by emotion and idealism when an individual is confronted by a genuine condition instead of a cloud-cuckoo-land theory.

This sort of thing looks as if our educators are going to the psychological methods of a century or two ago, when psychology was a science of introspection and the scientist, like the poet, tried to look in his heart and write—a method very sensibly discarded for the purely objective laboratory tests of today.

A question addressed to large numbers of college girls of a certain age, as to whether they were still chaste, might, if answered truthfully, have a certain value in social statistics. But a question addressed to the whole human race as to how much money each would demand before he would eat human flesh is still rank moonshine and nothing else.

If truthfully answered! My private suspicion is that our young people enjoy nothing quite so much as pulling their questioners' legs. All except the docile and earnest and serious girls and boys in teachers' colleges. They are already being trained for modern education and will presumably swallow any number of pedagogical camels without batting an eye.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE— WITHOUT CALOMEL

And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

If you feel sour and sunk and the world looks punk, don't swallow a lot of salts, mineral water, oil, laxative candy or chewing gum and expect them to make you suddenly sweet and buoyant and full of sunshine.

For they can't do it. They only move the bowels and a mere movement don't get at the cause. The reason for your gloomy, sour feeling is your liver. It should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily.

If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You have a thick, bad taste and your breath is foul, skin often breaks out in blemishes. Your head aches and you feel down and out. Your whole system is poisoned.

It takes those good, old CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." They contain wonderful, harmless, gentle vegetable extracts, amazing when it comes to making the bile flow freely.

But don't ask for liver pills. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills. Look for the name Carter's Little Liver Pills on the red label. Resent a substitute. Best drug stores. ©1935 C. M. Co.

AUTO PLUNGES INTO LOBBY

By International News Service

New Rochelle, N. Y., May 6—Elevator boys at the 12-story Pershing Square building had the surprise of their lives today when an automobile plunged into the lobby of their building and came to a stop in front of their cages with an unconscious man at the wheel.

After a freak collision with a bakery truck, his car plunged over the curb, smashed through swinging doors, banged aside a set of revolving doors, and came to a stop 15 feet within the lobby, directly in front of the elevators.

Frank Farrell, 25, New Rochelle, was driver of the truck. Both men were treated for cuts and bruises.

"UPSIDE DOWN" Boy Failing

By Associated Press

Buffalo, N. Y., May 6—His condition suddenly turned extremely serious, Wallace Bradley, Buffalo's 11-year-old "upside-down stomach boy," will be rushed to Fall River, Mass., tomorrow for an immediate operation.

Dr. Alexander J. Ferris, the boy's physician, said the operation is imperative, and Dr. Philemon E. Truesdale, who righted little Alyce Jane McHenry's stomach, has promised to do the same, free of charge, for Wallace.

Yesterday Dr. Ferris said he would send the boy and his mother to the hospital in his own automobile.

ILLINOIS BANS Heart Balm Suits

Springfield, Ill., May 6—Illinois' bachelor governor, Henry Horner, permitted a law outlawing suits for "heart balm" to become effective July 1, without his signature.

The measure bans suits for alienation of affections and civil suits resulting from breach of contract to marry as well.

JOHN F. BLASTS R. R. 'LEADERS'

Boston needs new leaders if its railroads and ports are to be saved.

That was the warning of former Mayor John F. Fitzgerald while discussing transportation problems before the Catholic Union of Boston. He said, in part:

"Our railroads are run by third-rate men just because their relatives happened to build them. It is not true that the children of geniuses are geniuses. We need leaders who will save our railroads and our ports."

The former mayor warned against turning roads here over to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. He added:

"The men now running our roads do not care if the New York or Pennsylvania roads absorb them. Those men are like many of the mill owners—they would just as soon that the mills would be in the South."

Fitzgerald is to leave for Washington to keep an appointment with Huey Long Thursday, when he will continue his transportation discussions. And the former mayor said:

"What chance have I with Huey?"

18 DIE AT POLLS In Yugoslav Riots

Belgrade, May 6 (INS)—The Yugoslavian government today announced an overwhelming victory in the parliamentary elections yesterday, in which riots cost at least 18 lives. Government candidates won 320 seats.

Her Kisses Lured Men To Holdups

Jefferson City, Mo., May 6—Prison awaits Edna Murray, the Kissing Bandit of Minnesota, although she has been eliminated from the Bremer kidnaping prosecution.

Lieutenant Governor Harris has signed a requisition to bring the woman back to Missouri penitentiary from which she escaped three years ago.

She lured a score of men into hold-ups by offering kisses. Three times she escaped from jails.

When Edward G. Bremer was kidnaped, she was captured with companions in a Kansas hide-out, but when taken to St. Paul, she was exonerated of the abduction.

Missouri officials recognized her as the jail-breaking fugitive who must serve 20 years to complete a quarter-century sentence for highway robbery.

MOLEY JOINS Roosevelt on Trip

Washington, May 6—President Roosevelt was back in the White House today after a week-end cruise on the Potomac river aboard the government yacht Sequoia.

Mr. Roosevelt was accompanied by Ed Flynn, New York secretary of state and Bronx Democratic leader, and Mrs. Flynn; Miss Marguerite Le Hand, a secretary, and Raymond Moley, magazine editor and intimate friend.

ALYCE BATTLE DATE TO BE SET

Taunton, May 6—Court officials said today no date had been set for the hearing of the petition of Mrs. Leuella McHenry that she be appointed guardian of Alyce Jane, who is recovering from her "upside down" stomach operation.

Paul McHenry, Alyce's father, also failed to appear today. He is an Iowa salesman and was reported on his way here to contest the suit.

It was considered unlikely a date for the hearing would be set until after a conference by attorneys.

500 ENDORSE Coughlin Views

The doctrines of Father Coughlin were praised at a meeting of 500 men and women in Somerville high school auditorium. Membership blanks for the National Union for Social Justice were distributed.

Mayors of three cities, scheduled to speak, sent word they could not attend. Eric M. Scott of Roxbury, chairman of the meeting, opened by saying that none of the speakers had authority to represent Father Coughlin and that views presented were not necessarily the views held by Father Coughlin.

Crash Injures 25

Inverness, Fla., May 6—Twenty-five young men from the governmental transient camp at Ocala were injured, several critically, in a truck-automobile collision one mile south of Inverness.

AUTO STRIKE PEACE NEAR

By Universal Service

Toledo, O., May 6—Resumption of peace negotiations between striking Chevrolet auto plant workers and the General Motors Company is a step nearer following a conference between Francis Dillon, American Federation of Labor organizer, Edward F. McGrady, assistant Secretary of Labor, and local strike leaders.

Dillon, advised that an independent group of workers, not affiliated with the A. F. of L., had decided to take a secret vote on a plan to return to work pending a strike settlement agreement.

Opposition to any member of the labor board participating in any vote settlement was expressed by Dillon.

NORMANDIE On Test Cruise

St. Nazaire, France, May 6—The giant liner Normandie, France's candidate for Atlantic shipping supremacy, pushed her 79,000 tons out to sea for ten days of every conceivable test known to marine engineers.

Her first voyage to New York has been set for May 29.

Mulhern Aids Meet

Plans for a banquet and entertainment for the sixth annual get-together of former Senator Joseph J. Mulhern's campaign organization will be discussed at a meeting tomorrow in the Parker House.

Babe and Dizzy

Can Relax In Pinch | That Harvard Crew Situation

By WALTER KILEY

Pinch Hitting for Austen Lake

HUMOR HAS the uncanny faculty of cropping out in the most unexpected places and at the oddest times.

Walter Kiley

Here at last was to be an outward manifestation of the much publicized feudal rivalry between two all-time greats of baseball, the fat and aging George Herman Ruth in the cream uniform of the Braves and Jerome Herman Dean, picture of youth and vitality, in the sombre gray of the St. Louis Cardinals.

"Ruth is not a great hitter," anathematized Dizzy on the eve of the epic meeting. "He is slipping fast. He has lost his timing and sureness.

"His batting average will be low this year. In fact he can't hope to last much longer."

Rank heresy, this, and a foul blow aimed below the belt of the Moses who came to Boston to lead the Braves out of the wilderness.

Came the game and the first inning appearance of Babe at bat, a thunderous ovation roaring far across the Charles as Boston's populace voices its loyalty.

Dizzy hitches his belt and then with his flawless symmetry of motion, he pitches while the crowd holds its breath.

* * *

Honors Go to Dizzy

Dizzy starts to wind up for the second pitch. He looks at the Babe, and the Babe looks at Dizzy. They exchange words.

And then the humor of the situation strikes them both. Babe falls back from the plate doubled up with laughter.

Dizzy topples back from the mound, his face wreathed in grins. It is a minute or two before they regain composure.

It is later of small moment that Ruth strikes out and that on his third trip to the plate he is thrown out by the second baseman.

Honors go to the dizzy one. It is his day and decidedly not the Babe's. Dean even adds fuel to the fire by connecting with a homer off Ed "Lefty" Brandt and a mngle later.

But the thought strikes home, after that fourth inning episode, that there must be an existing bond of admiration between these two leading showmen, who recognize in each other the attributes of greatness and are able to find humor in a critical situation.

The President's Son

LIFE ISN'T all fun when you have the President's son on your varsity crew. Charlie Whiteside, Harvard rowing coach, realizes this. Whatever befalls young Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., is a matter of national importance.

So it was that when Franklin and Captain Sam Drury were demoted along with the other oarsmen of the Crimson varsity just previous to the Quadrangular Regatta on the Charles, the story spread throughout the country. Whiteside knowing previous relations where the famous offspring was concerned, feared the attendant publicity and thereby held off the announcement of the change until the last possible moment. Hence the unfounded stories which went the rounds of a night before spree which brought down official punishment.

* * *

Gallant Son of Gallant Fox

FOR MONTHS horse lovers think in terms of the Kentucky Derby. For an entire year and for years before, owners plan and breed with the Derby as their goal.

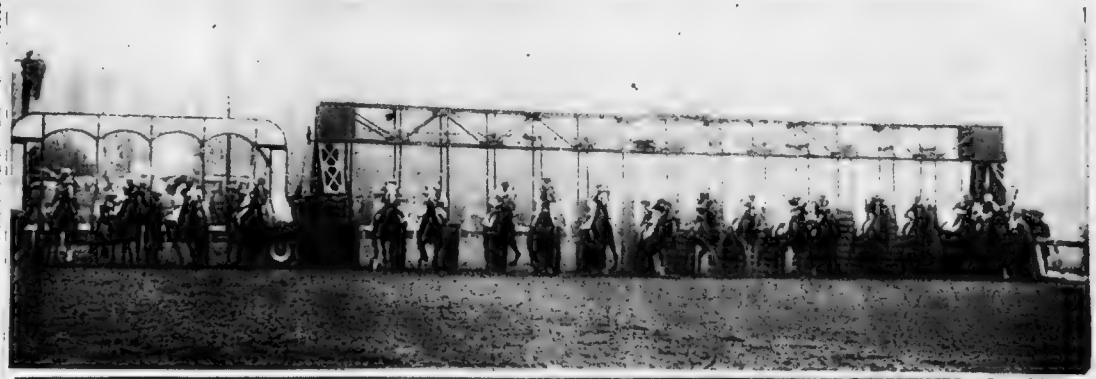
Close to 60,000 wend their way from far distances to the blue grass regions. They spend millions. They wager more. Hundreds of thousands glue their ears to the radio transmitter.

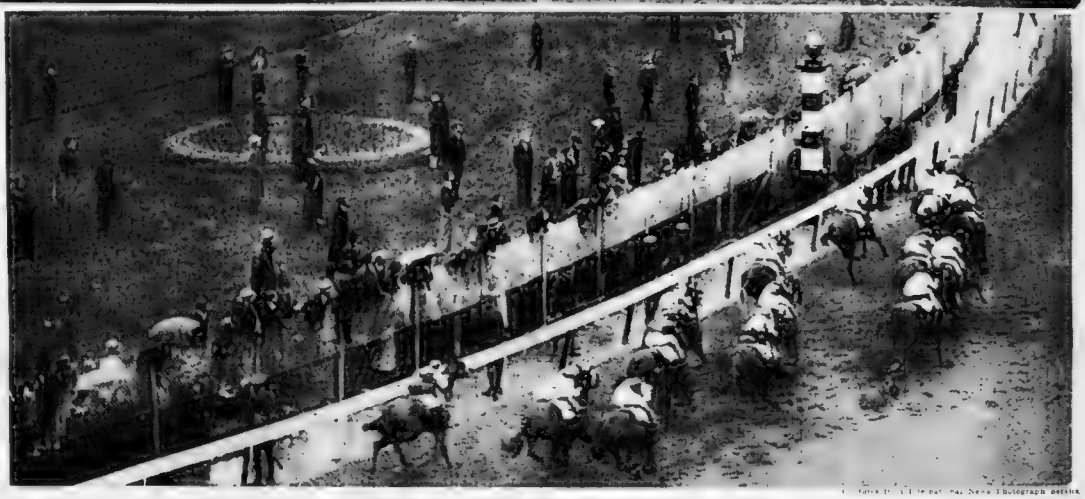
The race is on. Nellie Flag breaks out front first. Omaha wins. It's all over in little more than two minutes. What is this thing called sport? There must be something to it.

* * *

CLASS TELLS. Good breeding always asserts itself whether it is in man or beast. William Woodward's Omaha is the gallant son of a grand daddy, his famous sire, Gallant Fox, which won the 1930 Derby.

It takes heart to win in a distinctly class race. Omaha had it. Its blood ran red in spite of the fact that its thoroughbred upbringing calls for blue instead of red blood. Fifth at the half mile post, first at the finish, meeting the challenges and conquering them.





It was anybody's race as the 18 Kentucky Derby starters broke away from the stall gates. Omaha, Commonwealth, Today, Nellie Flag, Plat Eye and many others were given a fair chance to take top honors. But it was a different story at the first turn, where there was considerable pushing and shoving. It was at this juncture, as Damon Runyon points out, that Nellie Flag discovered the rest of the field were not composed of gentlemen. Runyon, incidentally, had been saying since last summer's Saratoga meeting that Omaha would win the Derby. Omaha d'd. Watch him go in the Preakness at Jamaica next Saturday.

Classes include 112, 118, 126, 135, 147, 160, 175 pounds and heavyweights, and it looks like steady hours of battling starting at 7:30 p. m.

The entry list is studded with the classiest boys the tournament has ever seen. Many of them came close to winning New England titles recently, and one, Jimmy Garrett, the colored flash from the South End, will be defending the crown he won last year.

As usual, however, the heavyweight division is expected to provide the major portion of the evening's fireworks with Peter Staples, Framingham, Yancey Henry, Lynn, Leon Benoit, Lowell, and Jim Brennan, Boston, the outstanding entries.

All competitors must be at the Boston Arena at 5 p. m. to weigh in, according to an announcement by Tom Kanaly of the B. A. A., who is conducting the tournament.

He expects 35 to 40 bouts, but there are entries enough for many more. However, many of these additional bouts will be eliminated in the weighing in ceremonies.

SOX START Ostermueller IN CLEVELAND

Cleveland, May 6—Lefty Fruz Ostermueller was Manager Joe Cronin's selection to pitch for the Red Sox today in the opening game of the series with the league leading Indians.

Cronin originally had planned to open here with Lefty Grove, but the veteran has had little chance to work out of late because of the incessant rain, and is not in the best of trim.

The Sox left Coach Al Schacht in Detroit. He is still in the hospital suffering from an internal disorder, and will not join the club until it reaches Chicago.

Plat Eye Didn't Do Right By Our Nell-ie Flag

By Damon Runyon

Copyright, 1935, by Universal Service

Louisville, Ky., May 6—Plat Eye is no gentleman.

The writer hesitates to bring this grave accusation against a horse of excellent family, and connections, and sound upbringing like Plat Eye, but there it is.

Plat Eye was guilty of the most uncouth behavior toward gentle Nellie Flag in the Kentucky Derby Saturday, completely spoiling whatever chance the lady horse might have had of winning.

Plat Eye ogled her. He jostled her. He pinched her. His conduct was that of a bounder and a cad.

He got in her way right at the start of the race, when gentle Nellie Flag was hustling off, prim and proper, and all aglow, and Nellie was so astonished at this cavalier treatment that she drew up in a huff.

She huffed herself out of considerable headway, but quickly recovered, and darted for the first turn, her dignity ruffled, but her speed unimpaired.

Then nearly all the other male horses in the race turned scoundrels on her, and gave her the good old hip at the turn, and leaned on her down the back stretch in a manner that stamped them as no better than hoodlums in their treatment of a lady.

The writer does not think Nellie Flag could have out-scrambled Omaha under any circumstances but she never had a good chance to try, and what she thinks of Plat Eye is something that may not be printed here.

RIGHT TO BEEF

You knew, of course, if you are a steady reader of this column, that Omaha would win the race. You knew, too, that it would be a record-breaking crowd, and that the "handle" in the pari-mutuels would be the biggest since the days when everybody had money in their pants pockets.

It was $1,031,000 on the day, which is tremendous in these times.

But you did not know that these blue-bloods of the turf were going to make it so tough on our Nell, did you? The lady has a right to beef. Her brothers, if any, should do something about Plat Eye, the ruffian.

"The Fox of Belair," with Earl Sande up, made a colorful combination. It was easy, and pleasant to write about them.

Now comes Omaha, and Willie Saunders, to revive the turf glory of William Woodward's red-dotted white silks, that blazed high back in 1930. Omaha may be just as good a horse as his parent.

It is when the furlongs stretch out to deeper jumps that Omaha finds his sweeping legs and begin scoring. He runs as if he would draw a few jaunts of about two of three miles.

Of course you must allow that in addition to Willie's cuteness is mixing over into the great open spaces, Omaha is learning how to run. A race horse gathers education through experience.

Omaha ran right past everything in front of him when Willie Saunders called. That is the way his father used to run for Sande.

You can make all the excuses in the book for the other horses in the Derby, but the answer is Omaha rolled ahead when he got ready, and the result was not even close.

Roman Soldier, "the black king of the everglades," is a tough, game head-turning little horse, tightened up perhaps too tight, by winter racing and he beat everything else in the Derby but Omaha, yet he was not menacing the winner at the finish.

Omaha was going away. Another quarter of a mile, and he would have been ten lengths in front of Roman Soldier.

Omaha is a grandson, on his father's side, of Sir Gallahad III and these Sir Gallahads are slow coming to hand. But once they get going they can travel long and travel far.

N. U. SEEKS FOURTH IN ROW

Northeastern's varsity nine will seek its fourth straight victory this afternoon at Huntington Field, Brookline, with American International College of Springfield as the opposition.

After a lethargic start, the men of McCoy have found their batting eyes and cracked down three rivals last week. Two of the victories were shut-outs by Charlie Latour-neau, over Clark, and "Lefty" Kihs over Upsala. The latter's exhibition was the smoothest performed by an N. U. hurler this season.

Thus the Northeastern record, considerably improved by last week's winning surge, now stands with conquests over Boston College, Panser, Clark, New Hampshire and Upsala, with losses to Brown, Lowell Textile and Tufts.

Either Captain "Deacon" Gilbs or Charlie Letourneau, both right-handers, will start against the visitors.

The N. U. team will line up as follows: Cahoon, ss; Morse, 2b; Mackiernan, 1b; McCarthy, rf; Elliott, lf; Traynor, 3b; MacNamara (or Bennett), cf; Langevich, c; Gillis (or Letourneau), p.

Mr. Boston Sonny Broke Happy

By JACK CONWAY

SPEAKING of news: Gus Sonnenberg tells me he is happier today than when he had $300,000 back in boom days. He says he isn't worrying about the loss of his fortune. He knows that if he can regain the championship he will be on the road to riches again.

• • •

The old Dynamiter has a busy mat program. If he wins from Rudy Dusek in the Arena on Wednesday night, he would like to meet Dan O'Mahoney. Jim Londos and Ed Don George in the order named.

Mr. Boston

• • •

I don't see how Gus can get a crack at George without also taking on Henri DeGlane. The public still considers the Frenchman No. 1 challenger.

• • •

Dusek is as powerful as Sonnenberg, and believes he will stop the former Dartmouth hero's comeback curse. This tussle should furnish plenty of action.

• • •

I have a small wager with Gus White that Governor Curley will turn in a card of 90 at Sandy Burr on Thursday. It will be Governor's Day, and everybody in Massachusetts' Who's Who will be there.

• • •

I shall also look to see Attorney John F. Feeney at Sandy Burr. The fiery Feeney shoots a very good game of golf. Babe Ruth and Bill Grimes will bear testimony to this statement.

• • •

DERBY PICKERS

Damon Runyon, feature writer for the Boston Evening American and Boston Sunday Advertiser, picked Omaha to win as far back as last August. More important, he named Omaha to win on the day of the race.

Tap and Gallop, two more Boston Evening American selectors, rode to victory with Omaha.

I had a modest bet on Roman Soldier to win, and he certainly gave me a run for my money. He was second.

• • •

I believe one of our New England tracks should try to arrange a race which would rival the Kentucky Derby in point of interest. New England is the choicest racing spot in the country, and all mutuel handles would be shattered if as fine a field as the one that started the great classic at Churchill Downs should race here.

The Kentucky Derby, rich in tradition, is a great social event as well as a turf classic. You don't belong in the good old State of Kentucky if you are not on parade at the Derby.

• • •

The Boston and New England interest in the Derby indicates there will be a tremendous rush to Rockingham Park for the grand opening on May 15. Colonel Dave Egan, Record Editorial Jr. "Right eye," will give you a proper welcome.

Colonel James B. Murphy of the Kentucky Colonels will take time out as managing editor of the Daily Record to give the Rockingham opening the proper social standing. Colonel Murphy is back in town today after meeting the other million Kentucky colonels at the Derby.

• • •

GEORGE ON SPOT

ED DON George does not get many carefree moments. He is being shot at by George Zaharias, Dan O'Mahoney, Henri DeGlane, Strangler Lewis, Chief Little Wolf and Gus Sonnenberg.

• • •

Everybody but Dizzy Dean is anxious to lift George's wrestling crown. Zaharias came nearest to accomplishing that feat in his recent tussle with George at the Garden.

He scored a fall, and was on his way to counting with a second when he was disqualified by Referee Davey Donnell for the alleged use of the strangle hold.

Zaharias has charged that the referee gave him the well known "work." He considers himself fortunate to get a rest this bout and intends to make the most of an opportunity.

• • •

Henri DeGlane has been installed a heavy favorite to win over Dick Daviscourt in the semi-final to the George-Zaharias bout. There are thousands of mat fans who still consider the Frenchman the greatest wrestler in the world.

AMATEUR BOUTS

NORTH WALES II, BEST

KILMER Entry IN 2D

BEST IN FIRST IS LADY ROMA

By Dave Wilson

Jamaica, N. Y., May 6—North Wales II, Willis Sharpe Kilmer's imported colt, has shown a fine turn of speed in morning trials.

We must not only rate him the probable winner of the six furlongs of second number, but the safest hazard on a smart card here this afternoon.

FIRST RACE

Lady Roma, Berelt, Cash Book.

LADY ROMA, second to Golden Lyra only a few days back, is entitled to top rating in an affair of this sort on the strength of that effort.

SECOND RACE

North Wales, Tempestuous, Malbrouk

NORTH WALES 2ND, making his first start on this side of the Atlantic, comes up to this with a series of brilliant workouts. Only a few days back, the foreigner whirled six panels in 1.13 3-5, the five-eighths in 1.00. His final was a blazing half mile in :47.

THIRD RACE

White Cockade, Wha Hae, Sparta

Reliberb say that WHITE COCKADE is the best juvenile uncovered in this sector to date. Sage colorbearer won his only start in a common canter.

FOURTH RACE

Open Range, Black Buddy, Quel Jeu

Shooting for price and expect to get same if OPEN RANGE runs back to his fast morning trials. Turned six panels in 1:13, the half in :47 for a final.

FIFTH RACE

This Way, Volta Maid, Garden Message

Have a hunch that THIS WAY will belong to Frank Hawkins in this affair. Whizzed six furlongs in :47, for a final.

SIXTH RACE

B. B. Stable Entry, Crowded Hours, Happy Hunter

The B B Stable entry of BRIGHTDON and MY SELECTION will be hard to down for top money. Either is capable of winning.

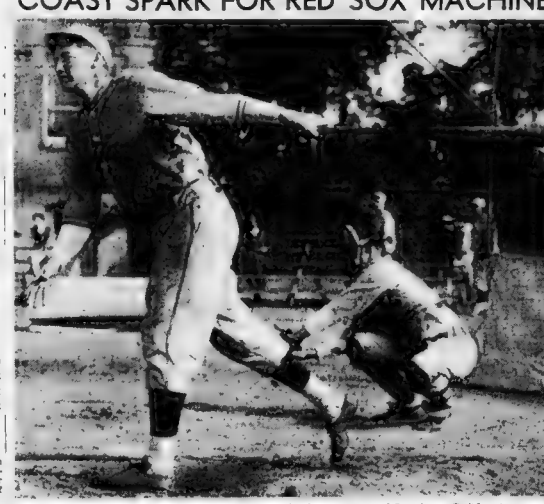
COAST SPARK FOR RED SOX MACHINE



A clean hit is smashed out by Ernie Holbrook of University of Southern California, newly signed Red Sox first baseman. He'll join the Sox in Cleveland on Sunday. He stands 6-2, weighs close to 190, has fielded close to 1.000 and hit above .300 in college ball.

TWI Feature at MALDEN

By BOB AHEARN

Twi news gathered around the sandlots:

Lord Tanning and Sacred Heart Men's Club square off in a Suburban Twi League meeting this evening at Ferryway Green, Malden. Both clubs boast standout performers. Lord Tanners have Tony Colucci, former Holy Cross star, and Ned Murray. Danny Cropley and Eddie Melanson will disport for Malden.

It will be the opener for the Sacred Heart club at home, and Mayor John Dever will throw out the first ball. The Sacred Heart Boys' Scout fife and drum corps will lead the parade to the field.

Five games are ruled for the Suburban tomorrow evening. First National Stores will be at Cambridge Red Sox; St. John's at Winthrop; Hall at Hoyt Pals; Sacred Heart at Shaw Club; Commonwealth Fuel at Watertown Pals.

Boston Park League opening is set for next Monday at the Dorchester Town Field. Jordan Marsh, last year's champions, meet Roxbridale Twi. Eddie Collins of the Red Sox and Manager Bill McKechnie have promised to attend.

Buddy Galvin, Lowell Honeys' crack infielder last season in the Northeastern League, has left to join the Elmira team of the N. Y. Penn League. Galvin will be playing under Bill Hunnefield, former pilot of the Lowell club.

Tony Plansky, one time great at Georgetown and leading hitter in the Cape Cod League last season, will manage the Bourne entry this year . . . Joe Donahue is doing a great job as umpire in the Suburban.

DuCharme Gets Title Shot

Maurice DuCharme, spectacular French matman, takes on José Firpo, light heavyweight champion, in a two out of three falls feature in the Mechanics Building ring tomorrow night.

To DuCharme it is the most important match of his career.

In other words he must subdue the titleholder or be relegated to the rear of the group of grapplers who are now seeking to dethrone Firpo.

Pat Schaeffer is down to meet Winn Robbins in the semifinal of 30 minutes. A supporting card of six other bouts complete the program.

Danish Horse Owner Calls U. S. Trainers 'Shoemakers'

By Ed Cogswell

Rockingham Park, Salem, N. H., May 6—They call Swen A. Neilson "Dutch" for the opaque reason that he was born in Copenhagen, Denmark.

"Dutch" is the young horse owner of the four-year-old colt, Speedmore, now quartered here, and is looking hopefully toward the opening day of the meeting, May 15, when Speedmore starts in the feature event of the day, the Speed Handicap.

Neilson will talk about Speedmore, and some more about Flamula, an importation from Sweden, which will make its American debut at the coming meeting here.

He will tell that Speedmore is "cut out to be a good horse, but ran into a lot of hard luck"; that he won at Hialeah, finished second at Tropical Park twice, and came home second in Maryland.

Then he goes on to draw a picture of the bike races in his homeland, where pari-mutuel betting is allowed and bike races draw thousands more than horse racing.

ALL RIDE BIKES

And he tells of the simple life of the Vikings, where automobiles are rarities and everybody, including his 61-year-old mother, rides a bicycle to and from market and to and from work.

He pictures a blue sky, and blue ice, and white snow that crunches under your feet, and sleigh bells and the laughing talk of thousands of happy voices, when flat and steeplechasers are held on the ice.

"They talk a lot about stimulation over here," he says. "Why, we get permission on cold days over there, and right in the paddock, to give the horses a swizzle of wine or cognac.

"Do they use dope over there?" I asked. "Of course not," he replied, "unless they can get it, which is very rare, indeed."

Dutch admits there are far better horses in the United States than there are in Denmark, but he insists that the trainers there are far superior to the run-of-the-mine workaday trainers in this country.

"Over there," he says, "jockeys are developed to become horsemen. Here they become touts."

'SHOE-MAKERS'

In Denmark and in Sweden, jockeys must be with a stable for two years before they are allowed to ride in a race. For these two years, they serve an apprenticeship, taking care of and training a single horse under the direction of a competent trainer.

During that time they spend the winter nights at school, five nights a week, where they are taught the stored-up knowledge of the greatest veterinarians in Sweden. A trainer, too, must serve an apprenticeship for three years before given a license.

"Over there, they have real trainers," Neilson asserts, "while here, most of them are shoemakers. I'll give you an illustration.

"The greatest trainer of running horses in Sweden is Alex Thorngren, under whom I served my apprenticeship. His son, Ragner, is a jockey who grew too big.

"Despite the fame of his father, young Thorngren could not get a license to serve as a trainer for trotters. He is at the Hanover Stock Farm, in Hanover, Pa., now, getting experience.

"And, by the way before I forget it," finished Dutch, "the only cities in Europe worth visiting are Copenhagen, Stockholm and Oslo. Don't go amiss on this fact."

CHINESE U. S. Net Foes IN CUP PLAY

By Associated Press

Mexico, D. F., May 6—Mexico's Davis Cup team, victorious over Cuba in a clean sweep, retired to the sidelines today to await the outcome of this week's series of cup matches between the United States and China.

Daniel Hernandez's 6—2, 7—5, 3—6, 7—5 victory over Jose Aguero and Esteban Reyes' 8—6, 6—1, 6—3 conquest of Joffre Etecheverry in the final singles matches gave Mexico the series with Cuba by a 5-0 score, and sent the winners into the American zone finals to be played here May 17-18-19.

The American-China matches will be played Friday, Saturday and Sunday, with the American team of Bryan Grant, Donald Budge and Gene Mako heavily favored over China's Bin Kie Kho and Guy Cheng.

RUSSIAN Claims Swim Mark

Moscow, May 6 (AP)—Nicholai Borisev of Russia today laid claim to the world's 400-meter backstroke record. He swam the distance in 5 minutes, 24 and 8-10 seconds today. The listed world's record of 5:26.4 was established by the Japanese, M. Kiyokawa at Tokio, September 30, 1933.

TOP IS Nervy Nella IN 1ST AT PIMLICO TODAY

By Dave Wilson

FIRST RACE

Nervy Nella, Tody Con, Dalmatia

NERVY NELLA, away since last summer, stands out as the class in this Maryland bred affair. The work tab says she is ready. TODY CON, a surprise winner at Havre de Grace, is strictly the one to fear.

SECOND RACE

Dunrillin, Brad, Election Day

DUNRILLIN, a first time starter, is reported to have worked fast and schooled well before shipping up from Virginia. The Read color bearer will be opposed by an indifferent lot of fencers and doesn't have to be much in order to win.

THIRD RACE

Smear, O'Neil, Hereward

SMEAR, fourth to Marmion, Black Falcon and Popo only a few days back, is dropping down a bit in class and needs only intelligent handling in order to trace the winner's circle.

FOURTH RACE

Vanderbilt Entry, Whitney Entry, Hiatus

The Alfred G. Vanderbilt stable entry of SOBRIETY and NOUVEAU RICHE appears to have a strangle hold on this affair. Either is capable of winning, but Sobriety will be my choice if both parade postward.

FIFTH RACE

Cohort Miss, Manager Bill, Molley

COHORT MISS appears to stand out in the light in this number on the strength of her corking second to Dokras. MANAGER BILL, well backed last trip, is dropping seven pounds off that effort and looms all over as the one to fear.

SIXTH RACE

Bloodroot, Firethorn, Demonstration

BLOODROOT should never leave the result in doubt under a feather of 109 pounds. The Bradleyite picked up his win under double wraps from Brownwig and that sort last time out.

SEVENTH RACE

Drawnsword, Dixie Dora, Flag Raising

DRAWNSWORD, the best horse in this affair, is far down on the also eligible list. He figures to stand a world of betting if able to get postward. DIXIE DORA, gun from the barrier, must be accorded top preference if the top one fails to start.

EIGHTH RACE

Sun Spear, Heiress, Prettywise

SUN SPEAR, second to Brains on opening day, is dropping five pounds off that effort. Under the existing weights, he looms all over a winner. HEIRESS sharpened up in sprints, should outlast PRETTYWISE for the place.

It will be Fuller's first start as a grappling official, and he proposes to enter the ring with his hands well taped, just in case.

Crimson Crew Shakeup Due

Whiteside to Make Shifts Before Next Race

Harvard's varsity crew demoted in a sensational squad shakeup last Saturday a few minutes before race time, is due to undergo a process of re-formation.

The Crimson has two full weeks before its next regatta, in which it will race Columbia and Tech on the Harlem river, New York.

Although the change of the entire boat was not unprecedented in intercollegiate crew history, previous shifts lacked the public interest which this possessed since rowing at No. 7 in the varsity boat was Franklin D. Roosevelt, son of the nation's President.

A giant, standing six feet four inches, young Roosevelt won his varsity seat with ease and has been in the ranking shell since the varsity started outdoor work on the Charles.

The varsity boat, which rowed in the junior varsity race on Saturday, had Captain Sam Drury, stroke; Leonard P. Eliel, 7; Franklin D. Roosevelt, 6; Thomas H. Choate, 5; Edward B. Simmons, 4; Raymond S. Clark, 3; Oliver B. Scott, 2; William Haskins, bow.

In the junior varsity shell were Robert Cutler, stroke; Robert B. Watson, 7; George T. Keyes, 6; Henry F. Atherton, 5; Henry Saltonstall, 4; Philip V. Bray, 3; Roger W. Cutler, 2, and Talbot Rantoul, bow.

PIRATES AT BRAVES FIELD FOR THREE-DAY STAY

30,000 See Diz Fan BABE

CARDS TAKE TILT, 7-0

By Joe Cashman

Those ghastly groans you may have heard heralding the dawn were the nightmare ravings of the few Braves who could sleep at all.

Yes, brother mourners, it's as bad as that. And, worse yet, there's no immediate relief in sight.

The Cardinals have gone. But with the Wigwam grass still wet with the blood spilled by the champions, the Pirates from Pittsburgh are here with ruthless keen to continue the slaughter of the innocents.

Harold "Pie" Traynor, who used to be a gentle, inoffensive lad when he hung up his bat in Somerville, joined the Buccaneer craft up the Charles today for a three-day stay.

And the Braves are without the services of Babe Ruth for the cold which has hindered the slugger since the start of the season will keep him in his hotel suite for several days.

Bill McKechnie and his weary Warriors may gain some consolation from the realization that the new enemy can't possibly treat them more roughly than the foe just departed.

Twenty-one innings have now come and gone since the Tribesmen scored a run. They'd have to do better than that to escape with their lives against the Bloomer Girls.

ARKIE VAUGHAN

The Bucco had their troubles in their road against those other tough babies in the West — the Cards, Cubs and Reds—but they've run riot since invading the effete East. They come here after taking two out of three in Brooklyn.

The young Corsairs who are being hanged in effigy along the banks of the Gowanus are Elijah "Cy" Blanton and Floyd "Arky" Vaughan.

Elijah horse-collared the Stengel Stooges Saturday, "Arky" hit a homs run for the only tally of that game, and hit another with two mates in the final encounter.

"Arky," when he hasn't been scintillating at shortstop, has been compiling the highest major league batting average of players who have engaged in more than ten games.

CY BLANTON

Elijah, a rookie named after the prophet of old who saved his people from heathenism, has saved his mates from falling out of the race. The Pirates have won eight games, and this big pitcher has won four of them.

But this pair doesn't represent the Bucs' entire strength by any means. There's Boss Traynor, still the cream of the third-base crop; Gus Suhr, the Poisonous Wanera, Floyd "Babe" Herman and Guy Bush, fresh from Utah; Waite Hoyt, Earl Grace, Red Lucas etcetera.

Our Braves will have to show plenty more than they did against the Cards to hold this Smoky City crew in check.

DIZ AND BABE

Close to 30,000 fans turned out to see a Ruth-Dean duel and remained to watch "Diz" laugh at Babe and all his mates while the Cards pounded out a 7-0 triumph.

Three times the Bambino went to bat. He walked the first time, fanned the next and finally rolled out to Durocher.

Fourth Whitehead Chisox Star

Chicago, May 6 (US)—Johnny Whitehead, the rookie pitching sensation of the Chicago White Sox, hung up his fourth straight win of the season while the Chisox blanked the Senators, 4 to 0, for their ninth victory in 10 starts.

The White Hose have won 11 and lost only four so far this season and have a snug hold on second place.

NEW FACES In Arena Mat GALLERY

Two new matmen, Bill Middlekopf, giant German from Milwaukee, and Les Ryan from New York are booked along with that spectacular bearded Polish nobleman, Count Casimir Polawski, who has awed spectators at the Arena in two previous matches by his almost superhuman strength.

Middlekopf meets the Count, Ryan faces Frank Sexton, "man of a million holds," and Harry Piers, conqueror of Ed George in the 1928 Olympics, faces Leo LeFevre in the preliims.

Rudy Dusek, who'll probably be a slight favorite over Sonny in their return clash, is again relying about the referee, refusing to agree to Charlie Donnell, who disqualified him and gave the victory to Sonny in the first meeting

OAKLEY W. G. A. MAGNET

By Bill Grimes

After losing two in a row, the Middlesex District is in a frame of mind to step right up and knock Southern out of the undefeated class today in the fifth round of the Women's Golf Association of Massachusetts team match championship at the Oakley Country Club.

Although it has only been able to break even in four matches, the Middlesex District is one of the strongest teams in the association.

CLEAN SWEEP?

Rosamond Vahey, the state champion, Mrs. E. H. Baker, Jr., many time holder of the W. G. A. title, and Martha Brewer have not rounded into form as yet, and their failure to win with more consistency has been the cause of the poor showing made by Middlesex.

Southern District has four straight victories to its credit. A win over Middlesex will give Capt. Georgo L. Wrenn's team a clean swing for the first round.

Until it defeated the weak Northern District, 9 to 0, last week at Blue Hill, Southern had plenty of trouble annexing the odd points from Midland, Country Club and Central.

Most of the strength of the Southern District team is at the top of the line up, and, if Middlesex shakes up its playing order, there may be an upset at Oakley today.

Midland District, which is right on the heels of Southern, with three wins and one loss, is playing at The Country Club today. Midland has a well balanced team, one which, with a break or two, can win the title.

FIVE UNBEATEN

Unless Northern takes a decided brace, Central will be returned a winner at the Salem Country Club. Going into the fifth round today there are five undefeated four match players. Mrs W. O. Dow, Central; Mrs John Grew and Mrs. George L. Wrenn, 2d, Southern, and Laura Robbins and Mary Slattery, Midland.

It will be of much interest to note how many of the four straight match winners survive today's tilt.

Kennedy Horses Lead at Newark

By Associated Press

Newark, N. J., May 6—The stables of Mr. and Mrs. William J. Kennedy of Brookline, Mass and Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Untermyer of Greenwich, Ct., are fighting it out for premier honors in the hunting classes at the 13th annual Newark horse show. So far the Massachusetts string has a slight edge

PROVIDENCE Skipper Wins

Essex, Ct., May 6 (AP)—A strong southeast wind and squally weather brought trouble to the skippers participating in the spring dinghy regatta on the Connecticut river here.

There were two spills, two craft had their masts broken and the tiller broke on a third.

First place winners were: Class B special, Corny Shields of Larchmont, N. Y., sailing Prudence; Class B, regular, J. S. Sutphen of New York, skipper of the Patty; Class A, Walter E. Rowe, of New York and Essex, in the Lizz; and Class D, Bill Swan of Providence, R. I. sailing the Janice.

DOZEN BRAVES REACH, BUT NONE SCORES

By Joe Cashman

What price hits or men reaching base?

A dozen Braves and only ten Cardinals reached first as the champions blanked our heroes, 7 to 0 much to the disgust of the largest local crowd of the current season.

While "Dizzy" Dean allowed ten hits as many as a trio of Tribal hurlers yielded, he didn't permit a safety until he had a six-run lead, and he saw to it that the natives came through with no run rescuing bingles.

This caused many to believe he could have made the Tribesmen look much more helpless, but Manager Frankie Frisch apparently didn't feel that was about it. When the first two Braves up in the fifth singled, the Cardinal bull pen got busy.

It was a funny sight and, while the Babe couldn't see it, he realized it. He broke out into such a hearty guffaw that he had to step out of the batter's box to return to normalcy.

Time was when Rabbit Maranville could talk "Dizzy" out of a game, but apparently those happy days are gone. The "Rah" coached at first base throughout the Sabbath tilt and chirped plenty to no avail.

The one bright feature of the otherwise drab showing of the Warrenton was the batting of Randy Moore. He whacked out three clean hits, including a double which hit the 411-foot marker in right center.

After four days in bed, "Pinkey" Whitney was back in uniform and returned to third base following Joe Cascarat's removal for a pinch-hitter in the eighth.

The Terrymen have now engaged in three ties this season. That's more than usually occur in the entire league over a whole campaign.

Johnny Whitehead, amazing rookie hurler of the equally amazing Chicago White Sox, hung up his fourth victory in as many big league starts, as he blanked the Senators with four hits in the only American League game played.

Radio Answers

Q—Does the talent on Rudy Vallee's variety hour receive their pay from him out of a blanket sum—or individually?

D. K. of West Roxbury.

A—Arrangements are usually made through the sponsor and the price paid by them or rejected, Rudy's remuneration being his own with which to take care of his musicians. There is a budget limit of course and it is seldom exceeded

Q—Has the old movie comedian Charlie Chaplin ever done any commercial radio work, and for which concern? My friends claim they heard him.

Uncertain of Wollaston.

A—He has not. Charlie has made one or two special guest artist appearances and was also on the air for relief drive a year or so ago, but never commercially.

Q—What day or night, and what station carries the Mills Brothers?

S. W. of Waltham.

A—They are not on the schedules right now, having sailed for a European tour last week. They return in July or August.

Q—That voice announced as Ed Lord during this morning "Train Catcher" turn through WEEI chanels sounds like the same fellow Lord who was with WBZ-WBZA two years ago or more—is it him?

Alert, of Arlington.

A—You're right, the same Ed Lord.

B. N., of Needham.

RADIO CUCKOOS LAUNCH NEW AIR HOUR

By N. F. T.

Comebacks are beginning to color the radio picture. It's long been a question as to whether "Amos 'n' Andy" and others would attempt a revival if they ever went off the air for any extended period.

However, right now it's the well remembered "Cuckoos" setting under Raymond Knight direction, that is staging another bid for the broadcasting patronage it formerly enjoyed. Tonight is the night (WBZ) from 10 until 11 o'clock.

As of which above advice also educates the summer schedule section is behind sound sanctum walls. Many strivings, by which is meant non-commercial offerings, will be wafted across the four winds between now and the next season of nonsense. Fall, Station KYK! as the "Cuckoos" call their imaginary outlet gets going again tonight. Raymond Knight, who is the nonsense announcer and orchestra leader, makes himself ridiculous, claims his pet program will be funnier than ever. The jittery "Mrs. Pennsfeather," played by Adelina Thompson, is slated for more of her fluttering gush when the clock cuckoos ten times this evening. Such is the way it will all start. How it is to stop remains to be experienced by the coast-to-coast air audience ears.

N. F. T.

GYPSIES' GUEST

Phil Baker, famous radio jester, will be the guest of Harry Monick and the Gypsies this evening (WEEI) at 9 o'clock. The comedian will be accompanied by "Bottle," his well-meaning butler, several other of his broadcast stooges, and the famous accordion. Jan Peerce, tenor, and the orchestra will be heard in "Song of the Vagabonds," "The Song I Sing," Kreisler's "Liebeleid" Panama Rumba, "Tell Me That You Love Me," and Rimsky-Korsakoff's Dance, from "The Red Poppy."

Dramatic doings during the "Peaceful Valley" broadcast (WHDH) at 6 last evening, were exceptionally effective. George Brown, the sophisticated impressario, is doing a top-notch job of acting and direction there, the result as far as Brown is concerned being an increased loudspeaker clientele over New England

FLOYD GIBBONS' PAGE OF THRILLS AND MYSTERY

"Friend or Fool?"

Winthrop Man Wants to Know if Risking His Life Was a Good Deed—or Plain Lunacy

By FLOYD GIBBONS

HELLO, EVERYBODY!

"Was I being a good Boy Scout, or was I just a doggone fool?"

That's what today's new member wants to know, and I'm not going to attempt to answer the question.

FLOYD GIBBONS

Instead, I'll tell the story, just as HILDY'S N. WILLIAMS, OF 51 OTIS STREET, WINTHROP, told it to me, and let each individual club member draw his own conclusion. I've got to admit that Hildy Williams DID get himself into quite a sizable jam—walked right into it with his eyes open—to help out another lad who was in a jam himself.

But being in a jam doesn't make a fool of you, Hildy. It just makes you a member of the Adventurers' Club.

The United States hadn't sent any boys across yet, but preparations were well on their way and the U. S. battle cruisers that were in Boston Harbor, keeping an eye on the German ships interned there, were pretty touchy on the subject of maritime etiquette.

The men on board them had orders to fire at anything—even a shadow—that might possibly be a German bent on spying or sabotage. It wasn't exactly a good time to be fooling around with the Navy.

Now Hildy Williams lives in a house whose back yard runs right down to Boston Harbor. The weather was warm, and Hildy and his brother were sleeping outdoors in a tent, when, about 2 o'clock in the morning, Hildy awakened suddenly, out of a sound sleep, with a bright, flickering light shining in his eyes.

At first, Hildy thought the tent was on fire, but as he opened his eyes, he saw that it was a sailor—a Navy gob in uniform—holding a match before his eyes—saying something Hildy couldn't quite understand.

Hildy rolled over, rubbed the sleep out of his eyes, and the gob repeated his strange request.

He was a sailor on one of the torpedo boats in the harbor, he told Hildy, and had gone A. W. O. L. in order to send a telegram to his mother who was dying in Arizona.

With tears rolling down his cheeks he told Hildy that he would be court-martialed if he weren't aboard for roll call on the following morning—that he had taken French leave one or two times before, and that if he were caught this time it would be a serious offense he'd have to answer for.

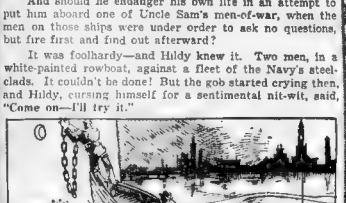
And he begged and pleaded with Hildy to row him out to his ship—to get him aboard secretly so he wouldn't have to face trial for being absent in the morning.

Hildy could tell from the way he talked—from the earnest expression on his face as he told his story—that the man was in earnest—was really in serious trouble.

But what was Hildy to do about it? Should he sympathize with a man who had disobeyed his superior officer and taken leave without permission?

And should he endanger his own life in an attempt to put him aboard one of Uncle Sam's men-of-war, when the men on those ships were under order to ask no questions, but fire first and find out afterward?

It was foolhardy—and Hildy knew it. Two men, in a white-painted rowboat, against a fleet of the Navy's steelclads. It couldn't be done! But the gob started crying then, and Hildy, cursing himself for a sentimental nit-wit, said, "Come on—I'll try it."



Silently—with rags tied around the oarlocks to keep them quiet, their bodies stiff and motionless as part of the boat itself, they started out from the shore.

He claimed he did, but they all looked alike to Hildy.

And when those eagle-eyed lookouts fired on a suspicious craft, did they make a direct hit, or just shoot to frighten you away?

The sailor didn't know whether they shot to kill or not. He had a hunch they did.

With his heart in his mouth, Hildy rowed on toward the huge, grey shadow that was his objective, keeping in a direct line with the bow as the gob had instructed him.

As they came closer they could see the sentries on the deck—marines—one on each side of the boat, guns on their shoulders, pacing slowly to and fro.

When those marines were aft—that was the time to pull in to the ship. Hildy rested on his oars, waiting for them to start the return trip.

Come on, soldier—make way for a sailor! At length they were headed toward the stern, and Hildy backed quickly up to the prow of the torpedo boat.

But there was no safety for Hildy Williams—yet. Just half of his job was over. He still had to make it back to the safety of open water.

It took Hildy another 10 minutes, while his heart thumped and the chills ran up his back at every unfamiliar sound, before he was safely out of range of those marine's rifles.

Then he headed for home, still wondering whether he'd been a good Samaritan, or just a blooming fool. And that question still puzzles Hildy Williams to this day.

Well, doggone it, here we are at the end of the column already, with only enough space to tell you boys and girls to send in your stories. Tomorrow a wild thriller—"Hold That Tiger!"—terror aboard ship!

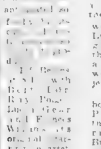
MUSICAL Will Return to Local Stage

By GEORGE HOLLAND

Two surprises in the mail. "Life Begins at 8 40" will return to Boston, where the big revue passed its novitiate last fall, for a brief engagement at the Boston Opera House.

But "Three Men On a Horse" probably will not come here for that summer run announced



George Holland Producer Alex Yokel has selected for the pe wiere of "Three Men On a Horse."

In a letter Mr. Yokel reveals know that he is now thinking that Boston should be reserved for the coming fall.

"I think at the moment I shall forget about Boston and send the No. 3 company direct to San Francisco after Montreal," he writes.

If Mr. Yokel remains steadfast in the current plan, it is indeed that Boston will see "Three Men on a Horse" next winter with the company now playing in John Abbott fares in New York at the Playhouse.

The No. 3 company is composed of first flight actors, with Percy Kilbride in the leading role. The No. 1 company has William Lynn giving the performance of his career in the same part. Percy Kilbride will be excellent in anything he does, but your correspondent will be pleased if Mr. Lynn and his fellow-troupers who impersonate Shirley Booth and Sam Levene are the actors who play the Boston engagement. They are real perfect.

The background of Mr. Yokel's decision to send his No. 3 company eastward is that the young producer has been disappointed at every turn in his negotiations for a local theater on a rental basis. With a shooting interest on his hands, Mr. Yokel deduced that he was entitled to an "edge" in acquiring a Boston theater for a summer engagement.

His first choice was the Wilbur, and his second the Plymouth. The Wilbur is one of the legitimate fields most apparently Mr. Yokel could not come to terms with the Plymouth management.

The Theatre Guild's "Porgy" with music by George Gershwin will come to Boston in October. Todd Duncan, a music professor at Howard University, will play the part that Paul Robeson played in the straight dramatic version.

Gladys Swarthout to Star In "Carmen" Film

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Motion Picture Editor Universal Service

Los Angeles, May 6—Nothing's too good for Gladys Swarthout, singing star of the Metropolitan Opera Company, who has also achieved nation-wide fame on the radio.

Miss Swarthout not only has a voice to charm the birds off the limes, but she has beauty as well. So Paramount has signed to star in "Carmen." That ought to be a casting worthy of the opus.

He has bought for Paramount the worldwide rights to Bizet's "Carmen," the most popular opera with film makers. And, of course, that means Jesse Lasky, Cecil B. DeMille and Louella O. Parsons will want sing. And after our giving Bill a voice. Maybe it's just as well since he is a good enough actor not to have to bother about musical comedy. He has been taken out of Old Man Rhythm" and Buddy Rogers, who is going to be bigger and better things on the RKO lot, has been substituted. Buddy has a voice and a band. Meanwhile, tests are being taken of young Beal for the role of Aramis in "The Three Musketeers." Alan Hale, I think, is a grand choice for Porthos.

Symphony Season Ends

By ANN AMES

Closing the formal concert season in Boston Dr. Serge Koussevitsky yesterday afternoon and evening presented the Bach B Minor Mass, one of the most magnificent and striking examples of the genius of the 17th century, whose 250th anniversary is being celebrated.

Perhaps no more significant and brilliant work could have been chosen to conclude the Bach Handel festival than the B Minor Mass.

In all the pages of Bach there is nothing more noble than the opening Kyrie, one of the simplest and most poignantly beautiful of all religious compositions.

Yesterday Dr. Koussevitsky and the orchestra again had the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, together with a group of soloists, as assisting artists.

Mme. Margaret Matzenauer, whose voice has the range for both mezzo and soprano roles, in comparison with past Boston performances, has never been in better voice. Her "Agnus Dei" was sung with musicianship and just the slightest dramatic touch happily irrestible to the singer, which added to its appeal.

Mme. Olga Averino, whose crystal clear voice has been heard to decided advantage several times during the season, carried the soprano, singing with splendid effect in the "Domine Deus" with Mr. Charles Hackett, and in the "Et In Unum Dominum" with Mme. Matzenauer.

Burlesque Programs Change

The lovely Kay Johnson of stage and screen fame is the featured headliner in the big parade of beauties, with Chiquita Gracia, exotic Spanish dancer; Evelyn Brooks, burlesque's "personality" girl, and Queenie King among the other charming and talented stars.

Honey Bee Kellar

The comedians who head the parade in "Pennant Winners," are the incorrigible Sid Fields, a favorite in burlesque and in Boston, Jack Greenman, Bert Grant, Johnny Barry, Joey Faye, Phil Eppens and Jack Keller, as hilariously funny a crew as any one show could boast. Edward Montgomery, the dancing "streak of lightning," is another feature of the show, and 24 beautiful girls round out the ranks.

At the Old Howard, the "Naughty Nifties" company with those ace fun-makers, Frank X. Silk and Harry Evanson, opened today.

SEC Releases

Rules for UNLISTED Market

By Hugh E. Bradshaw

Next on the Securities and Exchange Commission "must" list is regulation of over-the-counter dealers. Rules for their regulation and registration are out today and must be complied with by Aug. 1.

The commission, headed by Joseph P. Kennedy of Boston, will exempt only those who deal exclusively in exempted securities or who engage in a predominantly intra-state business, the act provided for in the act itself. Investors in over-the-counter markets will be afforded protection comparable to that now offered by organized exchanges. Most difficult feature from brokers' standpoint is the detailed statement which must be filed with the SEC.

* * *

The position of the market, after two weeks of mulling around in practically the same area, can not be viewed as a definite favorable. Excited moves from current levels might take place on sudden news on the bonus, the pension. But the fact that their happening is not proof that all is well. On the contrary a bonite rallies would weaken the long term position of the market sufficiently to promote an ultimate reaction more severe than one might look for at this point. We would adopt a conservative view and follow carefully issues in which a long position is outstanding.

* * *

Notebook: Some time ago we listed rail shares that would be unfavorably affected by a decision favoring the government in the Pension Case . . . In order to refresh memories they are Southern Railway, Louisville & Nashville, Lackawanna to name the most important . . . Defeat for the government would obviously help these shares . . . A decision upholding the government would not damage Pennsylvania, Baltimore & Ohio or Northern Pacific . . . Since they already have pension plans calling for greater outlays than the law demands.

* * *

Higher silver prices have been noted here as having one point in their favor. Namely, disruption of the pound-rupees relationship and probable subsequent withdrawal by England to talk stabilization. At roughly $1.09 per ounce it will be profitable . . . to melt down silver rupees and sell the metal in the world market. Or melt it down and put it away in the hoards. England wants nothing of a troublous nature in Indian affairs. That we must assume. A boom would be troublesome and she would undoubtedly be willing to trade gold stability for silver stability.

Shorts: United Business Service of Boston has completed an exhaustive study of first-quarter reports . . . Twelve important lines show combined earnings larger than in the first quarter of 1934 . . . Electrical equipment gained 201.1 per cent, building supplies improved 199.5 per cent, automobile accessories gained 73.8 per cent, advertising, publishing and printing bettered 1934 returns by 47.5 per cent . . . These four led the 40 industries whose smaller gains running down to .01 per cent by household products and office equipment.

Superheater

Report of Superheater Co. of Delaware and its Canadian affiliate for quarter ended March 31, 1935, shows net income of $180,633, equal to 20 cents a share on 874,529 no-par shares.

Apron String Diplomacy—Its Adverse Effect on American Trade

EVER since the war, American foreign economic policy has been shot through by a bizarre conceit.

Intoxicated by the knowledge that we had been transformed from a debtor to a creditor country, we began to act on the illusion that outside people were our wards.

The current manifestation of this attitude is the crusade, led by Secretary Hull, to divert alien nations from the mistaken ways of economic nationalism, with the epidemic of quotas, embargoes, high tariffs, and exchange controls.

The master income account and balance sheet concerning the international investment position of the United States, submitted to the President by George N. Peek, special foreign trade advisor, should help to awaken the American people to the realities.

The photograph of recorded transactions vis-a-vis the outside world discloses that realistic foreign nations have known how to take care of themselves.

In spite of our missionary zeal to supply the outside world with purchasing power with which to acquire the products of our agriculture, we have imported more agricultural products than we exported ever since 1922.

* * *

OUR excess of exports, supported by American loans, has been mainly in industrial products, largely in the form of machinery and equipment, which are designed to make the outside world self sufficient and independent of us.

If, as our altruistic internationalists advise, we open up our home market to foreign goods in order to build up alien purchasing power, forces will be set at work which in due course will again make us a debtor nation.

It is delusive to assume that foreigners will necessarily use the dollar credits, resulting from imports, to buy the products of American industry and agriculture.

They might instead elect to use such purchasing power to continue to add to their rich store of American investments, or perhaps to re-acquire the precious metal sent us, or possibly repatriate their own bonds which are still outstanding here.

We have already befuddled our foreign policy by three major fallacies, and are considering a fourth.

They all have to do with the artificial creation of purchasing power in the interest of foreigners.

* * *

DURING the war, the policy started with our effort to furnish the allies with foodstuffs and implements of combat—and through loans we gave them the purchasing power with which to acquire our products. We erred in setting up the war debts as a valid American asset.

Then, in order to finance reconstruction, we poured the funds of private investors into Europe between 1922 and 1929, and erred again in putting foreign bonds into the portfolios of our smaller banks as solid assets. While the outside world was getting purchasing power in exchange for its questionable bonds, it was using the funds in part to acquire American investments.

At the third stage, when foreign lending ceased, this country in 1934 by its policy of buying gold at $35 an ounce gave foreigners purchasing power, which was used to meet an adverse trade balance of the outside world to the tune of 381 millions, to reduce our investments in foreign securities by 732 millions, and to augment the investment of foreigners in our securities by 238 millions.

* * *

AT the fourth stage, men, like Secretaries Hull and Wallace, are asking us to provide the outside world with further purchasing power by deliberately increasing our imports through a reduction in tariff rates.

They are assuming that the dollar credits thus created will be diverted by foreigners into trade channels, overlooking the actual tendency of aliens to look for bargains and to make investment transactions.

The records show that we were mistaken in assuming that the foreigners were weak and needed to be led around by the apron strings.

Curley Keeps Pledge

This Time to Autoists

GOVERNOR CURLEY keeps another pledge. This time it is one made to the automobilists of Massachusetts.

He seeks a reduction of 30 per cent in compulsory automobile insurance rates.

Under the present leadership it has the means of ridding itself of these evils, once and for all, so far as the automobile insurance racket is concerned.

It should do so without delay.

It does not seem possible that any legislator will care to go on record for continuing a system open to such shocking censure.

An Education

In Patriotism

REPRESENTATIVE EDWARD BACIGALUPO, stirred to indignation, started a hunt for the official who routed the May Day parade of radicals through the North End.

We sympathize with his feelings.

At the same time we cannot help thinking that education is the thing these people really need.

And where could they find better inspiration along this line than in viewing the home of Paul Revere and the old North Church where the lanterns were hung aloft by the fathers of our free land?

The Port of Boston

And New England Industries

He properly felt there should be more interest in it.

As a part of the Legion's Americanization program this year, they have assigned the port of Boston and New England industries as topics for competitive essay writing in the town high school.

The young people who will carry on the work of their parents in years to come are learning as they write.

We hope the knowledge they learn will be a real help to our port and industries.

Highway Freighters

Critics Silenced

The Motor Truck Club of Massachusetts has endorsed the plan for Federal regulation of all forms of transportation.

By accepting regulation comparable to that railroads operate under, truckers courageously strike at those who deprive them of their business.

Individual motorists are too disorganized to effectively protest the tax and they will be thankful if it is soon removed.

JUST ANOTHER STRAW

The Business of a nation is all you represent;
But, Giddy-yup, Camel! (And here's another straw!)

Giddy-yup, Camel! You bear a heavy load
But, Giddy-yup, Camel! (And here's another straw!)

Hackled by restrictions and shackled by a Code;
Each step is regulated by a brand new law,
But, Giddy-yup, Camel! (And here's another straw!)

Giddy-yup, Camel! You stagger on your track.
(What cargo can be carried on a camel's back?)
You bear the greatest burden that we ever saw,
But, Giddy-yup, Camel! (And here's another straw!)

The "Science Twins"

Human Side of the News

By Edwin C. Hill

THE GLOBE TROTTER OF HEARST METROTONE NEWS

Edwin C. Hill

But the knowledge that they were in good hands and the fact that they had five other Woodses at home helped her to agree to the experiment.

So every morning the twin boys were bundled up and taken from the modest Woods' flat in New York to the ultra-modern Columbia Presbyterian Neurological Clinic.

The idea was to see what would be the difference between Johnny developed by scientific training, and Jimmy, with whom nature was to take 1st course.

RESULTS STUDIED

The Woods twins had their third birthday last month, and for those twenty-four hours they managed to crowd the five Dionne babes out of the limelight.

Newspaper reporters found them two normal boys and had to take the mother's word for it that Johnny was somewhat the brighter of the two, and the father's word for it that Johnny was the 'gentleman' and Jimmy, the 'mug.'

By that father Woods meant that Johnny was more polite and Jimmy more bossy.

The doctors had learned that Johnny could swim, climb and roller skate at the age of one year and that Jimmy could do none of these things, since he had not been trained to them.

But so far as walking and talking were concerned, science was no help. The infants were on their own in this most ordinary and most important development of babyhood.

The subject leads naturally to a discussion of prodigies. I have seen a dozen stories in the past few weeks about youngsters of seven and eight who show intelligence quotients like those of the Einsteins and Darwins.

I have read about a five-year-old girl who speaks English, French, German and Finnish, and about the six-year-old granddaughter of Dr. Vizetelly, the dictionary compiler, who boasts a vocabulary of 10,000 words.

The statement is quite common and quite untrue that most infant prodigies fail in adult life to live up to the promise of childhood.

It is almost absolutely false when applied to the field of music. Mozart, Liszt, Rubinstein, Hofmann, Kreisler and Heifitz were masters of the piano and violin before they were ten years old.

From the time he was seven his earnings were sufficient to support his family, which brought from Harpo Marx the sage remark that "before that he was a bum."

REMARKABLE ABILITY

In Hofmann's case the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children stepped in and took care of him while he played the piano up and down the land.

An Episcopal minister, now turned 28 and by name Edward Roche Hardy, Jr., is this century's match for Sir William Rowan Hamilton, Ireland's child prodigy of the last.

He was graduated from Columbia when 14, and a year later took his master's degree. He told his interviewers he hoped to make his career in the Episcopal Church, as he has.

New York Day by Day

New York, May 6—Diary: Awoke in a decision to eat nothing until nightfall, but at 1 p. m. snaffled a few chit-chats from the ice box. And so reading a chapter from that serene philosopher, Abbe Dimnet a note from Sinclair Lewis and one from Cesare Moneta, the Mulberry street restaurateur.

Squigg ling out my essay, with my wife to see a highly bespoke Duncan Phyfe table but could come to no bargain. Then to Cartier's and so much noble gesturing felt foolish, having just stepped in to adjust my watch. Thence down the avenue passing the ball tosser Lefty Gomes. And Rebecca West.

Dinner at Versailles with the Ryley Coopers, they to a broadcast and we to a first night, but so tedious we finished off with newe reele. And walked a few blocks with Anne and Henry Sell and home to find a telegram to dine most informally with the President and his lady at the White House.

Ely Culbertson won his most recent bridge match on the day he was elected New York's No. 1 Bore by readers in an evening paper contest. He has a complex manner that makes his public that comes in contact with him blow hot and cold. Sometimes he seems warm, pliable and airily irresponsible. Other times he is cold and rigid with a dour distrust for everything. Thus—friends and enemies.

Joe Schenck, of the movies, appears to have more fun in his relaxing hours than almost any heavy burdened executive of middle years. There's scarcely a night he does not don white tie and tails, either in New York or Los Angeles to make merry.

He is accomplished at the rhumba and no slouch at the tango. No matter how hard he plays the night before, he is at his desk early. Often he's the odd number of a threesome that includes his ex-wife Norma Talmadge and George Jessel. Modernity at its pinnacle.

Nathan's mind seems only to rotate venomously in his salty critiques. Out of his critical role, he is a personable fellow, often quite mellow, to those who know him well, although his contacts are few. He travels mostly alone with a silk-stockinged attitude toward things in general.

Sometimes he generates faint suspicion he is himself quite an actor in his own right. With the smallest circulation of any critic, he is most feared.

No soothsayer has ever captured the imagination of Harlem in the manner of Father Devine, a little black faith healer who is glitteringly accoutered with a whopping diamond ring and a robin's egg blue Rolls.

He claims to "materialize" money out of thin air when needed—just reaches into his pocket and it's there! He feeds hundreds daily—chitlins, corn pone and pot-likker, yum!—in a spacious red brick sanctuary he has built for his cult.

I like the taunt of John Chapman for the good old days sigher that the current cock-eyed conniptions have not produced anything so brassy and comic as Diamond Jim Brady.

Barzatelles: Lowell Thomas has put by a half million annuity out of public speaking . . . Billy Seeman has a miniature grocery store in his pent-house . . . Oliver Herford is regarded in England as America's foremost wit . . . Phil Baker never took an accordion lesson . . .

Golf Consolation

By Edgar A. Guest

When I have lost at bridge, I find
No pleasant thought to soothe my mind.
I'm one who gloomily regards
The time as spoiled by losing cards.
But when I lose at golf I say:
"The woods were beautiful today."

When I at golf have badly played
And cannot boast the score I made,
I soothe my tortured soul with this:
"I saw a sight I wouldn't miss.
I saw a tiny kingbird chase
A thieving crow right off the place."

When I in bunkers deep have toiled
Some phrase like this I can repeat:
"The breeze today was clover sweet,
That dogwood tree at Number Ten
Is radiant with bloom again."

Listen, World!

By Elsie Robinson

Why Do Our Best Plans Fail?

Plans—what a lot of them there are nowadays! Spectacular, daring plans. Shrewd, complicated plans.

Troubled times? Yes—but we've known trouble worse than this. Leaner days. Days when, as a nation, we went in rags. Yet nothing could stop us!

Elsie Robinson

We performed miracles. Why? Why do men and nations so often achieve such amazing triumphs when they're weak and poor—and fail so tragically when they're strong and rich?

WHAT IS LOST?

What's lacking? What has been lost somewhere along the trail? Any trusting, excited little child holds the answer. That little child has no plan, or only a vague one. No shrewd understanding; no experience or sophistication.

But it has something that is more potent than any plan, more compelling than sophistication. It has FAITH.

What is Faith? We have thought of it as a mental attitude, a religious exercise.

Dimly we are beginning to understand that it is more, much more, than these.

It is a definite, scientific force, as real as the law of gravitation, and it works as certainly for flesh, mind or spirit.

What Faith IS, no one can tell, but what Faith DOES, and why it performs such miracles, we begin to see. FAITH REACHES OUT. It reaches out exactly as a hand reaches out for the thing it needs. Faith reaches out and lays hold upon some secret source of strength which all men need, as surely as they need air or water or food; which all men should be able to tap.

TRUE FOR ALL

This is not a religious truth for pious people. It is a practical life truth for anyone, everyone. It is as true for the sinner as for the saint.

And often the sinner, because he has far more faith in the thing he is doing than the saint has in what he is doing, succeeds where the saint fails!

BELIEF—there is the secret. Belief in the thing you are doing. Belief so great that it overrides your own fear, your own lack of knowledge and experience. Belief reaching out, like a clutching, confident hand.
